INTRODUCTION

A good text-book on Doctrinal Theology⁴⁰⁹³ for Bible Schools and Theological Seminaries has been a real desideratum. It seems that we are to have this need supplied by Professor Bancroft's work on "Systematic Theology," which I have examined with much pleasure and profit. It has a number of qualities which will make it an admirable text as well as a good supplementary reader and a book for the general student of theology.

1. It is thoroughly sound in its teaching. By this I mean that it is based on the teaching of the Canonical Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and everywhere holds that they are the veritable Word of God. The work is entirely evangelical, and is not tainted with Modernism.

2. It is scholarly. It uses all the necessary technical terms for a scientific work on theology, so that the student may be made acquainted with the nomenclature of this important discipline. Yet the work is not over-burdened with technical terms. It is scholarly without being pedantic. Every science has to have its distinctive terminology, and this is true of the science of theology, the queen of the sciences.

3. The material is well classified. Methodology is a great art, as well as a science. Our author has mastered it. The scientific arrangement of the theological material gives to this work a unique value. The work is thus well adapted for classroom use, for the question and answer method, and for the assignment of lessons. Besides, when the student has mastered the work, he feels that he has a well-organized system of doctrine in his mind.

4. The apologetical element is strong in this treatise. For these critical and crucial times that is a distinct merit. The student of today needs more than a mere dogmatic statement of Biblical and churchly doctrine; he also needs to know the reasons for accepting those doctrines. The work is an admirable combination of doctrinal and apologetic theology. For example, it would be difficult to find anything more thorough-going and convincing than the section on Bibliology, the doctrine of Holy Writ.

5. Still another merit of the work is, it is up-to-date. Thoroughly evangelical, yet it does not avoid the questions that are agitating the thinking minds of the times. It argues the question with the Modernist and the dissecting Biblical critic. The student who masters this discipline in the school can never complain that he was not duly forewarned and forearmed regarding the crucial controversies of the day, which every thinking person must meet sooner or later. Here, he will be taught and fortified in his faith, and will be able to meet the opponent on his own ground when occasion arises.

In thus commending Professor Bancroft's book, I do not mean to say that I can underwrite all his positions. My own views of the sacraments (Baptism and the Lord's Supper) differ somewhat from his statements. However, with a few exceptions, I find myself in happy agreement with the work, and have no hesitancy in saying that, when it is issued in book-form, I shall adopt it as one of my supplementary texts in the seminary in which it is my privilege to teach Systematic Theology.

FOREWORD

The compiler of this splendid work on "Systematic Theology," Professor Emery H. Bancroft, has been Professor of Bible Doctrine and Systematic Theology in the Practical Bible Training School for a number of years, and has done work of the highest order in his department.

Having mastered the courses of the Moody Bible Institute and having taken work at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Professor Bancroft gave himself for years to the work of ministering as Pastor to several important and influential churches, and to teaching in Bible Conferences, giving all his spare time to the study of the Bible and the great works on Christian Doctrine and Systematic Theology. During recent years he has devoted all of his efforts to teaching and to the arranging and systematizing of the results of his years of investigation and research, carefully weighing every statement and testing every proposition by the Word of God and personal Christian experience, ere he passed them on to his classes.

Professor Bancroft is a man of rare spirituality, and the atmosphere of his intimate fellowship with God, which has been such a benediction in the classroom, is breathed in every paragraph of his great work, giving it a fine devotional and inspirational tone and causing it to appeal to the heart as well as the head.

The Management, Faculty, Workers, and Student Body of the Practical Bible Training School unite in gratefully commending this masterly compendium and praying the benediction of the Triune God upon it as it goes forth to bless and enrich other lives.

 D.D.

President, Practical Bible Training School,
Bible School Park, N. Y.

Our fathers held for their faith what they called the "Body of Divinity." By this they meant the system of Bible truth which expressed the Christian faith as taught in the Scriptures.

The Apostle John states the same in the following manner: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith," and by the word "faith" here, he means that body of teaching which expresses the Christian faith.

The Bible is a Book of systematic theology. It is an unfolding of the doctrine of God.

Rev. Bancroft, of the Practical Bible Training School, has done the work of a master here. There is a freshness and a fullness of expression that has seldom been surpassed. We predict that these lectures will become a text book for all institutions and individuals who delight in the fundamentals of the Christian faith and hope, systematically arranged.

PREFACE

This volume is the result of a felt need, a need which remained unsupplied by any of the published works on Theology with which we have come in contact. Not that there are no sound nor scholarly books in print on this subject, for there are; but none seemed adapted to our work. Therefore, we have given ourselves to the task of selecting from the best that has been written, as nearly as we could judge, the material which has entered into the composition of this treatise.

Originality, except for compilation and arrangement, is not claimed, as everything written on this subject, which was deemed competent, has been made to contribute toward its production.

The printed notes, from which this volume has been produced, have been used in the classroom quite effectively by making much of the discussion method, thus giving the students the privilege of expressing their own views on any given subject, thereby stimulating personal interest and independent thought. It is also expected that research work and outside reading will be required in connection with this text-book, thus giving the student the opportunity of coming in contact with the many and varied theological interpretations and conceptions held down through the ages.

This book will be used in the Practical Bible Training School, of Bible School Park, N. Y., (for which it was especially prepared) by the second and third year students. An elementary course in Bible doctrine is provided for the first year students, giving them a biblical basis for the more advanced work of Systematic Theology.

I wish at this time to express due appreciation and gratitude for the helpful aid rendered in the production of this work.

If God shall be pleased to use this volume in giving to those whom He has called into His service a better understanding of the great truths of His Word, we shall feel amply repaid for all the effort expended. God grant that it may be so.

INTRODUCTORY LECTURE

THE MEANING AND PURPOSE OF THEOLOGY

- I. THE DEFINITION OF THEOLOGY
- II. THE AIM OF THEOLOGY.
- III. THE NECESSITY OF THEOLOGY.
- IV. THE POSSIBILITY OF THEOLOGY.
- V. THE SOURCES OF THEOLOGY.

SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY

Introductory Lecture:

THE MEANING AND PURPOSE OF THEOLOGY

I Definition of Theology.

Theology is the science of God and of the relations between God and the universe.

Note: Though the word "theology" is sometimes employed in dogmatic writings to designate that single department of the science which treats of the Divine nature and attributes, prevailing usage has included under that term the whole range of Christian doctrine.

II The Aim of Theology.

It is the ascertainment of the facts concerning God and the relations between God and the universe, and the exhibition of these facts in their rational nature, as connected parts of a formulated and organic system of truth.

1. It is the work of theology as a science, not to create, but to discover facts. Schiller, referring to the ardor of Columbus' faith, says that if the great discoverer had not found a continent he would have created one. But faith is not creative. Had Columbus not found the land—had there been no real object answering to his belief—his faith would have been a mere fancy. Because theology deals with objective facts we refuse to define it as "the science of religion." Both the facts and the relations with which theology has to deal have an existence independent of the subjective mental processes of the theologian.
2. The work of theology as a science also includes the recognition and manifestation of the relations between these facts, and the synthesis of both the facts and the principles which unite them in a comprehensive, rightly proportioned and organic system.

Note: Scattered bricks and timbers are not a home; severed arms, legs, heads and trunks from a dissecting room are not living men; and facts alone do not constitute science. Science is facts plus relations.

3. As theology deals with objective facts and their relations, so its arrangement of these facts is not optional, but is determined by the nature of the material with which it deals.

Note: A true theology thinks over again God's thoughts and brings them into God's order, as the builders of Solomon's temple took the stones already hewn, and put them into the places for which the architect had designed them.
"No hammer fell, no ponderous axes rung;
Like some tall palm, the mystic fabric sprung."

III The Necessity of Theology.

1. It is necessary as a means of expressing the meaning of Christianity because of the nature of man, which includes reason as well as emotion.
2. It is necessary in order to define Christianity. The definitions may not be exhaustive, for the objects and experiences involved are beyond our capacity for knowing, in some of their aspects. But we may apprehend what we can not comprehend. We may know in part if not in full.

3. It is necessary in order to defend Christianity against attack.

4. It is necessary in order to propagate it.

Note: Christianity is a missionary religion; it is aggressive and diffusive in motive and aim. But no possible success can attend the propagation of Christianity without doctrine. The truth is employed to produce experience, then experience gives a new appreciation of truth.

IV The Possibility of Theology.

The possibility of theology has a three-fold basis.

1. It is grounded in the existence of God, who has relations with the universe. It has been objected, however, that since God and these relations are objects apprehended only by faith, they are not proper objects of knowledge or subjects of science. We reply:

(1) Faith is knowledge, and a higher sort of knowledge than that obtained by mere sense perception.

(2) Faith is knowledge conditioned by holy affection. Gal. 5:6.

(3) Faith, therefore, can furnish, and only faith can furnish, fit and sufficient material for scientific theology.

Note: As an operation of man's higher rational nature, though distinct from ocular vision or from reasoning, faith is not only a kind but the highest kind of knowing. It gives us an understanding of realities which to sense alone are inaccessible, namely God's existence, and some at least of the relations between God and His creation.

2. It is grounded in the capacity of the human mind for knowing God and certain of these relations. But it has been urged that such knowledge is impossible for the following reasons:

(1) Because we can know only phenomena: we reply,

A. We know mental as well as physical phenomena.

B. In knowing phenomena, whether mental or physical, we know substance underlying the phenomena, as manifested through them, and constituting their ground of unity.

C. Our minds bring to the observation of phenomena, not only this knowledge of substance, but also knowledge of time and space, of cause and right, realities, which are in no sense phenomenal. Since these objects of knowledge are not phenomenal, the fact that God is not phenomenal can not prevent us from knowing Him.

(2) Because we can know only that which bears analogy to our own nature or experience. We reply:

A. It is not essential to knowledge that there be similitude between the knower and the known. We know by difference as well as by likeness, by contrast as well as by comparison.

B. Our past experience though greatly facilitating new acquisitions, is not the measure of our possible knowledge.

C. Even if knowledge depended upon similitude of nature and experience, we might still know God, since we are made in God's image and there are important analogies between the Divine nature and our own.

(3) Because we can know only that of which we can conceive, in the sense of forming an adequate mental picture or image. We reply:

A. It is true that we know only that of which we can conceive, if by the term "conceive" we mean our distinguishing in thought the object known, from all other objects.

B. But the objection confounds conception with that which is only the occasional accompaniment and help, namely, the picturing of the object by the imagination.

C. That the formation of a mental image is not essential to conception or knowledge, is plain when we remember that, as a matter of fact, we both conceive and know many things of which we can not form a mental image of any sort that in the least corresponds to the reality; for example, force, law, space, or our own minds. So we may know God, though we can not form an adequate mental image of Him.

(4) Because we can know truly only that which we know in whole and not in part. We reply:

A. The objection confounds partial knowledge with the knowledge of a part. We know the mind in part, but we do not know a part of the mind.

B. If the objection were valid, no real knowledge of anything would be possible, since we know no single thing in all its relations. We conclude that, although God is a being not composed of parts, we may yet have a partial knowledge of Him, and this knowledge though not exhaustive may yet be real, and adequate to the purposes of science.

3. It is grounded in the provision of means by which God is brought into actual contact with the mind, or in other words, in the provision of a revelation of God Himself and certain of these relations. As we do not in this place attempt a positive proof of God's existence or of man's capacity for the knowledge of God, so we do not now attempt to prove that God has brought Himself into contact with man's mind by revelation. Our aim at present is simply to show that, granting the fact of revelation, a scientific theology is possible. This has been denied upon the following ground: that revelation as a making known, is necessarily internal and subjective,—either a mode of intelligence, or a quickening of a man's cognitive powers,—and hence can furnish no objective facts, such as constitute the proper material for a science. In reply to this objection urged mainly by idealists in philosophy;

(1) We grant that revelation to be effective, must be the means of inducing a new mode of intelligence, or in other words, must be understood. We grant that this understanding of Divine things is impossible without a quickening of man's cognitive powers. I Cor. 2:14. We grant, moreover, that revelation when originally imparted, was often internal and subjective.

Note: The revelation on the way to Damascus would not have enlightened Paul, had it been merely a vision to his eye. Nothing can be revealed to us which has not been revealed in us. The eye does not see the beauty of the landscape, nor the ears hear the beauty of the music. So flesh and blood did not reveal Christ to us. Without the teaching of the Spirit, the external facts will be only like the letters of a book to a child that can not read. Gal. 1:16.

- (2) But we deny that revelation is therefore useless or impossible. Even if religious ideas sprang wholly from within, an external revelation might stir up the dormant powers of the mind. Religious ideas, however, do not spring wholly from within, external revelation can impart them. Man can reveal himself to man by external communication, and, if God has equal power with man, God can reveal himself to man in like manner. If these idealists, Messrs. Morrel & Newman, can teach by a book, can not God do the same?
- (3) Hence God's revelation may be and is, in great part, an external revelation in works and words. The universe is a revelation of God. We claim, moreover, that, in many cases where truth was originally communicated internally, the same Spirit who communicated it has brought about an external record of it, so that the internal revelation might be handed down to others than those who first received it.
- (4) With the external record we shall also see that there is given under proper conditions a special influence of God's Spirit, so to quicken our cognitive powers that the external record reproduces in our minds the ideas with which the minds of the writers were at first divinely filled.

Note: We may illustrate the need of internal revelations from Egyptology, which is impossible so long as the external revelation in the hieroglyphics is uninterpreted; from the ticking of a clock in a dark room, where only the lit candle enables us to tell the time; from the landscape spread out around the Rigi in Switzerland, invisible until the first rays of the sun touch the snowy mountain peaks. External revelation. Rom. 1:19, 20, must be supplemented by internal revelation. 1 Cor. 2:10, 12. Christ is the organ of external, the Holy Spirit the organ of internal, revelation. 2 Cor. 1:20. Eph. 1:17. In Christ, "the yea" and, "the Amen"—the objective certainty and the subjective certitude, the reality and the realization. Objective certainty must become subjective certitude in order to a scientific theology. Before conversion we have the first, the external truth of Christ; only at conversion and after conversion do we have the second, "Christ formed in us." Gal. 4:19. We have objective revelations at Sinai, Ex. 20:22; subjective revelation in Elisha's knowledge of Gehazi. 2 Kings 5:26.

- (5) Internal revelation, thus recorded, and external revelation, thus interpreted, both furnish objective facts which may serve as proper material for science. Although revelation in its widest sense may include, and as constituting the ground of the possibility of theology does include, both insight and illumination, it may also be used to denote simply a provision of the external means of knowledge, and theology has to do with inward revelations only as they are expressed in, or as they agree with this objective standard.

Note: We have here suggested the vast scope and yet the insuperable limitations of theology. So far as God is revealed, whether in nature, history, conscience, or Scripture, theology may find material for its structure. Since Christ is not simply the incarnate Son of God but also the eternal word, the only Revealer of God, there is no theology apart from Christ, and all theology is Christian theology. Nature and history are but the dimmer and more general disclosures of the Divine Being, of which the Cross is the culmination and the key.

V The Sources of Theology.

God Himself, in the last analysis must be the only source of knowledge, with regard to His own being and relations.

Theology, therefore is a summary and explanation of the content of God's self revelations. These are, first: the revelation of God in nature; secondly and supremely the revelation of God in the Scriptures.

Note: Ambrose: "To whom shall I give greater credit concerning God than to God Himself?"
Von Baader: "To know God without God is impossible; there is no knowledge without Him who is the prime source of knowledge."
C. A. Briggs: "God reveals truth in several spheres; in universal nature, in the constitution of mankind, in the history of our race, in the sacred Scriptures, but above all in the person of Jesus Christ Our Lord."

1. The Theology of Nature.

By nature we here mean not only the physical facts, or facts in regard to the substances, properties, laws and forces of the material world, but also spiritual facts or facts with regard to the intellectual and moral constitution of man and the orderly arrangement of human society and history. The universe is a source of theology. The Scriptures assert that God has revealed himself in nature.

- (1) The outward witness to His existence and character is in the constitution and government of the universe. Psa. 19:1-6. Acts 14:17. Rom. 1:20.
- (2) The inward witness to His existence and character is in the heart of every man. Rom. 1:17-20, 32. Rom. 2:15.

Note: There are two books: Nature and Scripture—one written, the other unwritten; and there is need of studying both. The systematic presentation of these facts, whether derived from observation, history or science, constitutes natural theology, or the theology of nature.
Spurgeon told of a godly person who, when sailing down the Rhine, closed his eyes, lest the beauty of the scene divert his mind from spiritual things. The Puritan turned away from the moss-rose saying that he would count nothing on earth lovely. But this is to despise God's works.
J. H. Barrows says, "The Himalayas are the raised letters upon which we blind children put our fingers to spell out the name of God."
To despise the work of God is to despise God Himself. God is present in nature and is still speaking thru it.

2. The Theology of the Scriptures.

The Christian revelation is the chief source of theology. The Scriptures plainly declare that the revelation of God in nature does not supply all the knowledge which a sinner needs, Acts 17:23, Eph. 3:9. True science and the Scripture throw light upon each other. The same Divine Spirit who gave both revelations is still present enabling the believer to interpret the one by the other, and thus, progressively, to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Because of our finiteness and sin, the total record in Scripture of God's past communications is a more trustworthy source of theology than our conclusions from nature or our own private impressions of the teachings of the Spirit. Theology therefore looks to the Scripture itself as its chief source of material and its final standard of appeal.

Study Questions on Theology

1. Define theology.
2. What is the aim of theology?
3. Give four reasons for the necessity of theology.
4. What is the three-fold ground of the possibility of theology?
5. What objection is made to the first ground of possibility, namely, the existence of God who has relations with the universe?
6. What is the three-fold reply to the objection, that since God and these relations are objects apprehended only by faith, they are not proper objects of knowledge or subjects of science?
7. Give the first objection to the second ground of possibility, namely, the capacity of the human mind for knowing God and certain of these relations, with the three-fold reply to it.
8. Give the second objection to the second ground of possibility with the three-fold reply.
9. Give the third objection to the second ground of possibility with the three-fold reply.
10. Give the fourth objection to the second ground of possibility with the two-fold reply.
11. What is the objection to the third ground of possibility, namely, the provision of means by which God is brought into actual contact with the mind, or in other words in the provision of a revelation of God Himself and certain of these relations, and the five-fold reply?
12. What, in the last analysis, is the only source of theology?
13. Of what is theology a summary and an explanation?
14. What is meant by "nature" in terms of theology?
15. In what two-fold way does the Scripture assert that God has revealed Himself? Quote one passage with each.
16. What is the chief source of theology?
17. What do the Scriptures plainly declare concerning the revelation of God in nature? Quote one passage.
18. What is the relation of true science to Scripture?
19. Why is the record in the Scripture of God's past communications the most trustworthy source of theology?

CHAPTER TWO

THEOLOGY (limited meaning), THE DOCTRINE OF GOD.

- A. THE EXISTENCE OF GOD.
- B. THE ATTRIBUTES OF GOD.
- C. THE TRINITY OF GOD.

THEOLOGY

(LIMITED MEANING) OR THE DOCTRINE OF GOD

A. The Existence of God.

I False and True Systems of Theology and Theories of God.

1. Deism. This view represents the universe as a self-sustained mechanism, from which God withdrew as soon as He created it, and which He left to a process of self-development. Deism acknowledges God's relation to the universe as Creator, but denies that He sustains to it any Providential relation.

Note: Deism says in effect "God is the Maker, not the keeper of the watch." "An absentee God, sitting idle ever since the first Sabbath at the outside of the universe, and seeing it go." It regards the universe as a perpetual motion. Modern views of the dissipation of energy has served to discredit this theory. Will is the only explanation of the forces in nature, but according to deism, God builds a house, shuts himself out, locks the door, and ties His own hands in order to make sure of never using the key.

2. Atheism. This view excludes God altogether, denies Him any existence at all.
3. Skepticism and Infidelity. These two terms mean a doubt or disbelief in the existence of God, especially the God of revelation.
4. Agnosticism. This is a denial that God can be known. Etymologically, agnostic and ignoramus mean the same thing. The former is from the Greek, the latter from the Latin.
5. Pantheism. This view maintains that the universe in its everchanging conditions is but the manifestation of the one everchanging universal substance which is God; thus all, everything is God and God is everything. God is therefore a necessary but unconscious force working in the world.
6. Polytheism. This is the doctrine of many Gods.
7. Theism. This is the belief in the existence of a personal God,—Creator, Preserver and Ruler of all things.
8. Monotheism. This view teaches that there is but one God. Christianity, Judaism and Mohammedanism are monotheistic religions.

II Definitions of God.

1. Scriptural Designations.

- (1) "God is Spirit." John 4:24.
- (2) "God is light." I John 1:5.
- (3) "God is love." I John 4:16.
- (4) "God is a consuming fire." Heb. 12:29.

Note: Technically speaking these are not definitions but descriptions of God's nature and character.

2. Theological Definitions.

- (1) "By God we understand the one absolutely and infinitely perfect Spirit who is the Creator of all. Catholic Dictionary.
- (2) "The eternal source of all that is temporal." Ebrard.
- (3) "The Infinite Spirit." Kahnis.

- (4) "An eternal, uncaused, independent, necessary Being, that hath power, life, wisdom, goodness and whatsoever other supposable excellency, in the highest perfection, in and of itself." John Howe.
- (5) "A Spirit, eternal, unchangeable, in his Being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth." Westminster Catechism.
- (6) "The first cause and the last end of all things." Andrew Fuller.
- (7) "God is the Infinite and perfect Spirit, in whom all things have their source, support and end." Dr. Strong.

III The Origin of the Idea of God.

The idea of God is an intuition of the moral reason, i.e.,—it is innate in the human race. The knowledge of God's existence is a rational intuition; logically, it precedes and conditions all observation and reasoning; chronologically, only reflection upon the phenomena of nature and of mind occasions its rise in consciousness. Intuition simply means direct knowledge; it is to be distinguished from observation and reasoning, which give knowledge by indirect means.

The belief in a personal God is called a primary or first truth.

1. The Nature of First Truths in General.

(1) Negatively:

- A. A first truth is not a truth written prior to consciousness upon the substance of the soul,—for such passive knowledge implies a materialistic view of the soul.
- B. It is not actual knowledge of which the soul finds itself in possession at birth,—for it can not be proved that the soul has such knowledge.
- C. It is not an idea, undeveloped at birth but which has the power of self-development apart from observation and experience,—for this is contrary to all we know of the laws of mental growth.

(2) Positively:

A first truth is a knowledge, which though developed upon occasion of observation and reflection, is not derived from observation and reflection,—a knowledge on the contrary which has such logical priority that it must be assumed or supposed in order to make any observation or reflection possible. Such truths are not, therefore, recognized first in order of time; some of them are assented to somewhat late in the mind's growth; by the great majority of men they are never formulated at all, yet they constitute the necessary assumption upon which all other knowledge rests, and the mind has not only the inborn capacity to evolve them so soon as the proper occasions are presented, but the recognition of them is inevitable as soon as the mind begins to give account to itself of its own knowledge.

(3) Their criteria.

The criteria by which first truths are to be tested are three and may be applied to the existence of God, as a first truth.

- A. Their universality: By this we mean not that all men assent to them or understand them, when propounded in scientific form, but that all men manifest a practical belief in them by their language, actions and expectations. The belief in God as a first truth meets this test: no race nor tribe has ever been found without at least a rudimentary conception of the existence of a Supreme Being.

Note: Moffat, who reported that certain African tribes were destitute of religion, was corrected by the testimony of his son-in-law, Livingstone: "The existence of God and of a future life is everywhere recognized in Africa."

- B. Their necessity: By necessity is meant not that it is impossible to deny these truths but that the mind is compelled by its very constitution to recognize them upon the occurrence of the proper conditions, and to employ them in its arguments to prove their non-existence.—The belief in God as a first truth meets this test: infinity is the evitable correlative of finiteness. The race has an innate capacity for religion: the denial of God's existence involves the logical processes whose validity rests upon the assumption of His existence.

C. Their logical independence and priority:

By this is meant, that these truths can be resolved into no others, and proved by no others; That they are pre-supposed in the acquisition of all other knowledge, and can therefore be derived from no other source than an original cognitive power of the mind. The belief in God meets this test also. The intuition of an absolute reason is:

- a. The necessary presupposition of all other knowledge, so that we cannot know anything else to exist except by assuming first of all that God exists.
- b. The necessary basis of all logical thought, so that we cannot put confidence in any one of our reasoning processes except by taking for granted that a thinking Deity has constructed our minds with reference to the Universe and to truth.
- c. The necessary implication of our primitive belief in design, so that we can assume that all things exist for a purpose, only by making a prior assumption that a purposing God exists; can regard the universe as a thought only by postulating the existence of an absolute Thinker.
- d. The necessary foundation of our conviction of moral obligation, so that we can believe in the Universal Authority of right, only by assuming that there is a God of Righteousness, who reveals His will, both in the conscience and in the moral Universe at large.

Note: We cannot prove that God is, but we can show that, in order to the existence of any knowledge, thought, reason, conscience in man, man must assume that God is.

- (4) To summarize that which we have analyzed and considered in detail, we find that the belief in God's existence as a rational intuition or first truth has a four-fold content:
 - A. A Reason, in which man's mental processes are grounded.
 - B. A Power, awakening a sense of dependence.
 - C. A Perfection, imposing law upon the moral nature.
 - D. A Personality, recognized in forms of worship and prayer.
- (5) Supposed sources of the idea of God's existence which are wrong:
 - A. External revelation, whether communicated through the Scriptures or through tradition,—for unless man had from another source a previous knowledge of the existence of God from whom such a revelation would come, the revelation itself could have no authority from Him.

Note: A Revelation takes for granted that he to whom it is made has some knowledge of God, tho it may enlarge and purify that knowledge. We cannot prove God from the Authority of the Scriptures, and then also prove the Scriptures from the authority of God. The very idea of Scripture as a revelation pre-supposes belief in a God who can make it. We cannot derive from a sun-dial our knowledge of the existence of a sun. The sun-dial pre-supposes the sun, and cannot be understood without previous knowledge of the sun.

- B. Experience. Individual experience comes from sense perception, followed by reflection, but God is super-sensible, and hence does not come within the range of experience. If by experience is meant the accumulated results of the sensations and associations of past generations of the race, it may be asked, "How did the original generation or first man at the head of the series acquire the belief in God to transmit, except as a rational intuition."
- C. Reason. Reason often brings into consciousness the belief in God, but cannot cause it. The actual-rise of this knowledge in the majority of minds is not the result of any conscious process of reasoning. The strength of men's faith in God is not proportionate to the strength of the reasoning faculties; on the contrary, men of great logical powers are often inveterate skeptics, while men of unwavering faith are found among those who cannot even understand the arguments for God's existence.

IV Corroborative Evidences of God's Existence.

The Scriptures do not attempt to prove God's existence. It did not seem to occur to the writers of either the Old or New Testaments to produce arguments for it; everywhere and at all times it is a fact taken for granted, assumed and affirmed. The sublime opening of the Scriptures announces the fact of God and His existence and they further declare that the knowledge of God is universal, Rom. 1:19-21, 28, 32 and 2:15. Nowhere in them is the rise or dawn of the idea of God in the mind of man depicted. God has inlaid the evidence of His fundamental truth in the very nature of man, so that nowhere is He without witness. The existence of God apart from revelation is incapable of direct proof. There is, however a five-fold line of indirect proof, which corroborates our rational intuition. By indirect proof is meant evidence which points to God's existence as the necessary ground and condition of the existence of anything else. The five-fold arguments for the divine existence are as follows: the cosmological, the teleological, the anthropological, the Christological and the argument from congruity. These arguments may not prove conclusively that God is, but they do show that in order to the existence of any knowledge, thought, reason, conscience in man, we must assume that God is. As it is said of the beautiful, "It may be shown but not proven," so we say of the existence of God.

These arguments are probable, not demonstrative. For this reason they supplement each other, and constitute a series of evidences which is cumulative in its nature. Though taken singly, none of them can be considered absolutely decisive, they, together, furnish a corroboration of our primitive conviction of God's existence which is of great practical value and is in itself sufficient to bind the moral action of men.

1. The Cosmological Argument, or argument from change in nature.

- (1) The meaning and value of it. Cosmological comes from the Greek work "kosmos"—world or orderly arrangement. Everything begun whether phenomenon or substance owes its existence to some producing cause. The universe, at least so far as its present form is concerned, is a thing begun, and owes its existence to a cause which is equal to its production. This cause must be indefinitely great; a sufficient cause for that beginning. That the world could not come into being or into its present state of being of itself seems obvious: no more than nails, bricks, mortar, wood and paint, can form into a house or building of themselves.
- (2) The defects in it. While the cosmological argument proves that the cause of the universe must be indefinitely great it can not prove:
 - A. Whether this cause is a cause of substance or of phenomena only.
 - B. Whether it is a cause apart from the universe or one with it.
 - C. Whether it is a caused or an uncaused cause.

- D. Whether it is finite or infinite.
- E. Whether it is intelligent or unintelligent.
- F. Whether it is one cause or many causes.

2. The Teleological Argument, or argument from order or useful arrangement in nature.

- (1) The meaning and value of it. Teleological comes from the Greek word "telos"—end or design. Order and arrangement pervading a system, respectively imply intelligence and purpose as the cause of that order and arrangement. Since order and arrangement pervade the universe, there must exist an intelligence adequate to the production of this order and a will adequate to direct this arrangement to useful ends.

The major premise of this argument expresses a primitive conviction which is not invalidated by the objection, that order and useful arrangement may exist without being purposed,—for we are compelled by our very mental constitution to deny this, in all cases where the order and arrangement pervades the system: neither is it invalidated by the objection that order and useful arrangement may result from the mere operation of physical laws and forces,—for these very laws and forces, imply instead of excluding, an originating and superintending intelligence and will.

The minor premise of this argument expresses a working principle of all science, namely, that all things have their uses, that order pervades the universe, and that the methods of nature are rational methods: this premise is not invalidated by the objection, that we frequently misunderstand the end actually subserved by the natural events and objects,—for the principle is, not that we necessarily know the actual end, but that we necessarily believe that there is some end, in every case of systematic order and arrangement: it is not invalidated by the objection, that the order of the universe is manifestly imperfect,—for this argues not for the absence of contrivance or purpose, but of some special reason for imperfection; which reason we believe to be the sin of man.

- (2) The defects in it. While the teleological argument proves that there exists an intelligence and will adequate to the contrivance of the universe in its present form it cannot prove:

- A. Whether this intelligence and will is personal or impersonal.
- B. Whether Creator or only Fashioner.

C. Whether one or many.

D. Whether finite or infinite.

3. The Anthropological Argument, or argument from man's mental and moral nature.

(1) The meaning and value of it. Anthropological comes from the Greek word "anthropos"—man. This is an argument from the mental and moral condition of man to the existence of the Author, Law-giver and End. It is sometimes called "the moral argument." This argument may be divided into three parts:

A. Man's intellectual and moral nature requires for its author an intellectual and moral Being. Mind can not evolve from matter, nor spirit from flesh, consequently, a Being having both mind and spirit must have created man.

B. Man's moral nature proves the existence of a holy Law-giver and Judge, otherwise, conscience can not be satisfactorily explained.

C. Man's emotional and volitional nature requires for its Author a Being who can furnish in Himself a satisfying object of human affection and an end which will call forth man's highest activities and insure his highest progress. Only a Being of power, wisdom, holiness and goodness and all these in indefinitely greater measure than can be found on earth can meet the demand of the soul of man. Such a Being must exist: we must believe that He does or else believe that the very root of our nature is a lie.

(2) The defects in it. While this argument assures us of the existence of a personal Being who rules us in righteousness, and who is the proper object of supreme affection and service, it can not of itself prove:

A. Whether this Being is the original Creator of all things or merely the Author of our own existence.

B. Whether He is infinite or finite.

C. Whether He is a Being of simple righteousness or also of mercy.

4. The Christological Argument.

Christological comes from the Greek word "Christos"—the Anointed, i. e., the Messiah. This argument rests on the following premises:

(1) The Bible must be accounted for.

(2) The fulfillment of prophecy must be accounted for.

(3) Miracles must be accounted for.

(4) The supernatural character and the Divine mission of Christ must be accounted for.

(5) The influence of Christianity in the world must be accounted for.

(6) The fact of conversion—the moral and spiritual change in men—must be accounted for.

And these things can not be accounted for severally or together apart from the existence of God.

5. The Argument from Congruity. Congruity refers to a state of logical or practical agreement or harmonious relationship; the state of being harmoniously related or united; adaptation.

If we have a key which fits all the wards of the lock, we know that it is the right key. If we have a theory which fits all the facts in the case we know that we have the correct theory. Belief in a self-existent, personal God is in harmony with all the facts of our mental and moral nature, as well as with all the phenomena of the natural world: if God exists, a universal belief in His existence is natural enough; the irresistible impulse to ask a first cause is accounted for, or religious nature has an object; the uniformity of natural law finds an adequate explanation, and human history is vindicated from being a vast imposture. Atheism leaves all these matters without an explanation and makes, not history, alone, but our moral and intellectual nature itself an imposture and a lie.

While not one of the foregoing arguments taken by itself, may be considered an absolute proof of God's existence, yet taken together they constitute a series of evidences, which is both cumulative and conclusive.

B. The Attributes of God.

In contemplating the word and acts of God, as in contemplating the words and acts of individual men, we are compelled to assign uniform and permanent effects to uniform and permanent causes. Holy acts and words, we argue, must have their source in a principle of holiness; truthful acts and words, in a settled proclivity to truth; benevolent acts and words, in a benevolent disposition, moreover these permanent and uniform sources of expression and action, to which we have applied the terms principle, proclivity, disposition, since they exist in the same person, must themselves inhere, and find their unity, in an underlying spiritual substance or reality, of which they are the inseparable characteristics and partial manifestations. Thus we are led naturally from the work to the attributes, and from the attributes to the essence of God.

1 Definition of Attributes. The attributes of God are those distinguishable characteristics of the Divine nature which are inseparable from the idea of God and which constitute the basis and ground for His various manifestations to His creatures. We call them attributes because we are compelled to attribute them to God, as fundamental qualities or powers of His being, in order to give account of certain constant facts in God's self revelations.

II The Relation of the Divine Attributes to the Divine Essence.

- 1. The Attributes Have an Objective Existence. They are not mere names for human conceptions of God, conceptions which have their only ground in the imperfection of the finite mind. They are qualities objectively distinguishable from the Divine Essence and from each other.
- 2. The Attributes Inhere in the Divine Essence. They are not separate existences. They are attributes of God.
- 3. The Attributes Belong to the Divine Essence as Such. They are to be distinguished from those other powers or relations, which do not appertain to the Divine Essence, universally.

(1) The personal distinctions in the nature of the one God are not to be denominated attributes; for each of these personal distinctions belong not to the Divine Essence as such and universally, but only to the particular person of the Trinity, who bears its name, while on the contrary, all of the attributes belong to each of the persons.

(2) The relations which God sustains to the world, moreover, such as creation, preservation, government, are not to be denominated attributes; for these are accidental, not necessary or inseparable from the idea of God. God would be God, if He had never created.

- 4. The Attributes Manifest the Divine Essence. The essence is revealed only through the attributes. Apart from its attributes it is unknown and unknowable.

But though we can know God only as He reveals to us His attributes, we do, notwithstanding, in knowing these attributes, know the Being to whom these attributes belong. That this knowledge is partial does not prevent its corresponding, so far as it goes, to objective reality in the nature of God.

All God's revelations are, therefore, revelations of Himself in and through His attributes. Our aim must be to determine from God's words and works, what qualities, dispositions, determinations, powers of His otherwise unseen and unsearchable essence He has actually made known to us; or in other words, what are the revealed attributes of God. Scriptural illustrations are found in the following passages: John 1:18; I Tim. 6:16; Matt. 5:8; 11:27.

- ## III Methods of Determining the Divine Attributes.
- We have seen that the existence of God is a first truth. It is presupposed in all human thinking, and is more or less consciously recognized by all men. This intuitive knowledge of God we have seen to be corroborative and manifested by arguments drawn from nature and from mind. Reason leads us to a causative and personal intelligence upon whom we depend. This Being of indefinite greatness we clothe by necessity of our thinking, with all the attributes of perfection. The two great methods of determining what these attributes are, are the Rational and the Biblical.

1. The Rational Method. This is three-fold:

- (1) The way of negation, which consists in denying to God all imperfections observed in created beings.
- (2) The way of climax, which consists in attributing to God in infinite degree all the perfections found in creatures.
- (3) The way of causality, which consists in predicating of God those attributes which are required in Him to explain the world of nature and of mind.

Note: Though this method is valuable, it has insuperable limitations, and its place is a subordinate one. While we use it continually to confirm and supplement results otherwise obtained, all chief means of determining the Divine attributes must be from the Scriptures. Spurgeon says, "The old saying is, 'Go from Nature up to Nature's God!' But it is hard work going uphill. The best thing is to go from Nature's God down to Nature; and if you once get to Nature's God and believe Him and love Him, it is surprising how easy it is to hear music in the waves, and songs in the wild whisperings of the winds, and to see God everywhere."

2. The Biblical Method.

This is simply the inductive method, applied to the facts with regard to God revealed in the Scriptures. Those who accept the Scriptures to be a revelation from God, inspired in every part, may properly look to them as decisive authority with regard to God's attributes.

IV Classification of the Attributes. The attributes may be divided into great classes: Absolute or Immanent, and Relative or Transitive.

By Absolute or Immanent attributes, we mean attributes which respect the inner being of God, which are involved in God's relations in Himself, and which belong to His nature independently of His connection with the universe.

By Relative or Transitive attributes, we mean attributes which respect the outward revelations of God's being, which are involved in God's relations to the creation, and which are exercised in consequence of the existence of the universe and its dependence upon Him.

Under the head of Absolute or Immanent Attributes, we make a three-fold division into Spirituality, with the attributes therein involved, namely, Life and Personality; Infinity, with the attributes therein involved, namely, Self-Existence, Immutability, and Unity; and Perfection, with the attributes therein involved, namely, Truth, Love and Holiness.

Under the head of Relative or Transitive Attributes, we make a three-fold division, according to the order of their revelation, into Attributes having relation to Time and Space, as Eternity and Immensity; Attributes having relation to Creation, as Omnipresence, Omniscience, and Omnipotence; and Attributes having relation to Moral Beings, as Veracity and Faithfulness, or Transitive Truth; Mercy and Goodness, or Transitive Love; and Justice and Righteousness, or Transitive Holiness.

Schedule of Attributes

1. Absolute or Immanent Attributes:

- | | | |
|----------------------------|--|---------------------------------|
| A. Spirituality, involving | { (a) Life,
(b) Personality. | } Spirit, Infinite and Perfect, |
| B. Infinity, involving | { (a) Self-existence,
(b) Immutability,
(c) Unity. | |
| C. Perfection, involving | { (a) Truth,
(b) Love,
(c) Holiness. | |

2. Relative or Transitive Attributes:

- | | | |
|------------------------------|---|--|
| A. Related to Time and Space | { (a) Eternity,
(b) Immensity. | } GOD IS the Source, Support and End of all things. |
| B. Related to Creation | { (a) Omnipresence,
(b) Omniscience,
(c) Omnipotence. | |
| C. Related to Moral Beings | { (a) Veracity and Faithfulness, or Transitive Truth,
(b) Mercy and Goodness,
or Transitive Love,
(c) Justice and Righteousness, or Transitive Holiness. | |

NOTE—Above schedule to be credited to Dr. A. H. Strong.

NOTE—It will be observed, upon examination of the preceding schedule, that our classification presents God first as Spirit, then as the Infinite Spirit, and finally as the Perfect Spirit. This accords with the definition of the term God as previously given. It also corresponds with the order in which the attributes commonly present themselves to the human mind. Our first thought of God is that of mere Spirit, mysterious and undefined over against our own spirits. Our next thought is that of God's greatness; the quantitative element suggests itself; His natural attributes rise before us; we recognize Him as the infinite One. Finally comes the qualitative element; our moral natures recognize a moral God; over against our errors, selfishness and impurity, we perceive His absolute perfection. It should also be observed that this moral perfection, as it is an immanent attribute, involves relation of God to Himself. Truth, Love and Holiness, as they respectively imply an exercise in God of intellect, affection and will, may be conceived of as God's self-knowing, God's self-loving, and God's self-willing.

1. Absolute or Immanent Attributes.

- (1) Spirituality, and Attributes therein involved. In calling Spirituality an attribute of God, we mean, not that we are justified in applying to the Divine nature the adjective "spiritual," but that the substantive "Spirit" describes that nature. John 4:24; Rom. 1:20; I Tim. 1:17; Col. 1:15. These passages imply, negatively, that God is not matter. Spirit is not a refined form of matter, but an immaterial substance, invisible, uncompound, indestructible. They also imply that God is not dependent upon matter. It can not be shown that the human mind, in any other state than the present, is dependent for its consciousness upon its connection with a physical organism. Much less is it true that God is dependent upon the universe as his sensorium (nervous system)—the material medium through which His spirit-being functions. God is not only Spirit, but He is pure Spirit. He is not only not matter, but He has no necessary connection with matter. La Place, the astronomer, swept the heavens with his telescope, but could not find anywhere a God. "He might just as well," says President Sawyer, "have swept his kitchen with a broom." Since God is not a material being He can not be apprehended by any physical means.

NOTE—Those passages of Scripture which seem to ascribe to God the possession of bodily parts and organs, as eyes and hands, are to be regarded as anthropomorphic and symbolic. When God is spoken of as appearing unto the patriarchs and walking with them, the passages are to be explained as referring to God's temporary manifestations of Himself in human form,—manifestations which prefigure the final tabernacling of the Son of God in human flesh. Side by side with these anthropomorphic expressions and manifestations are specific declarations which repress any materializing conceptions of God; as, for example, that Heaven is His throne and the earth His footstool (Isa. 66:1), and that the heaven of heavens can not contain Him (I King 8:27).

We come now to consider the positive meaning of the term "Spirit." The Spirituality of God involves the two Attributes of Life and Personality.

- A. Life. The Scriptures represent God as the living God; Jer. 10:10; I Thes. 1:9; John 5:26. See also John 14:6; Heb. 7:16; Rev. 11:11.

Life is a simple idea, and is incapable of real definition. We know it, however, in ourselves, and we can perceive the insufficiency or inconsistency of certain current definitions of it. We can not regard life in God as:

- a. Mere process, without a subject; for we cannot conceive of a Divine life without a God to live it.

Nor can we regard life as:

- b. Mere correspondence, with outward condition and environment; for this would render impossible a life of God before the existence of the universe.

NOTE—Here we have, at best, only a definition of physical and finite life; and even this is insufficient, because the definition recognizes no original source of activity within, but only a power of reaction in response to stimulus from without. We might as well say that the boiling teakettle is alive.

- c. Life is rather mental energy, or energy of intellect, affection and will. God is the living God as having in His own being a source of being and activity, both for Himself and others.

B. Personality. The Scriptures represent God as a personal being. By personality, we mean the power of self-consciousness and of self-determination. By way of further explanation we remark:

- a. Self-consciousness is more than consciousness. This last, the brute may be supposed to possess, since the brute is not an automaton. Man is distinguished from the brute by his power to objectify self. Man is not only conscious of his own acts and states, but by abstraction and reflection he recognizes the self which is the subject of these acts and states.
- b. Self-determination is more than determination. The brute shows determination, but his determination is the result of influences from without; there is no inner spontaneity. Man, by virtue of his free will, determines his actions from within. He determines self in view of motives, but his determination is not caused by motives; he himself is the cause. God, as personal, is in the highest degree self-conscious and self-determining. The rise in our own minds of the idea of God, as personal, depends largely upon our recognition of personality in ourselves. Those who deny spirit in man place a bar in the way of the recognition of this attribute of God. The declaration in Scripture concerning God and His relations to the universe and men, clearly reveal personality in God: personal presence, Ex. 3:14. "I am that I am." God is not the everlasting "It is" or "I was," but the everlasting "I am;" personal characteristics, Psa. 139:1-4; I Cor. 2:11; Eph. 1:9, 11; Gen. 6:6; Prov. 6:16; personal relationship, Gen. 1:1, 26; Heb. 1:3; Psa. 104:27-30; Psa. 75:6, 7; Rom. 8:28.

(2). Infinity and the Attributes therein involved.

By Infinity, we mean, not that the Divine nature has no known limits or bounds, but that it has no limits or bounds. That which has simply no known limit is the infinite. The Infinity of God implies that He is no way limited by the universe or confined to the universe; He is transcendent as well as immanent. Transcendence, however, must not be conceived as freedom from merely spatial restrictions, but rather as unlimited resource, of which God's glory is the expression. Scriptural examples, Psa. 145:3; Job. 11:7-9; Isa. 66:1; I Kings 8:27; Rom. 11:33. In explanation of the term, infinity, we may notice:

- First: That infinity can belong to but one Being, and therefore can not be shared with the universe. Infinity is not a negative but a positive idea. It does not take its rise from an impotence of thought, but is an intuitive conviction which constitutes the basis of all other knowledge.
- Second: That the infinity of God does not involve His identity with "the all," or the sum of existence, nor prevent the coexistence of derived and finite beings to which he bears relation. Infinity implies simply that God exists in no necessary relation to finite things or beings, and that whatsoever limitation of the Divine nature results from their existence is, on the part of God, a self-limitation; for example, see Psa. 113:5, 6, "that humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven and in the earth."
- Third: That the infinity of God is to be conceived of as intensive, rather than extensive. We do not attribute to God infinite extension, but rather infinite energy of spiritual life. That which acts up to the measure of its power is simply natural and physical force. Man rises above nature by virtue of his reserves of power. But in God the reserve is infinite. There is a transcendent element in Him, which no self-revelation exhausts, whether creation or redemption, whether law or promise.

NOTE—Transcendence is not mere outsideness,—it is rather boundless supply within. God is not infinite by virtue of His filling a space outside of space,—He is rather infinite by being the pure and perfect Mind that passes beyond all phenomena and constitutes the ground of them. The former conception of infinity is simply supra-cosmic, the latter alone is properly transcendent. God is the living God and has not yet spoken His last word on any subject. God's life operates unspent; there is ever more to follow. The legend stamped with the Pillars of Hercules upon the old coins of Spain was "Ne Plus Ultra"—"nothing beyond," but when Columbus discovered America, the legend was fitly changed to "Plus Ultra"—"more beyond;" so must it ever be with God. See Psa. 71:15; Psa. 89:2; Psa. 113:4-6; Mal. 2:15; Isa. 52:10; John 1:16; John 1:50; II Cor. 4:17; Psa. 78:41.

Of the Attributes Involved in Infinity, we mention:

A. Self-existence. By self-existence we mean:

- a. That God has the ground of His existence in Himself. Every being must have the ground of its existence either in or out of itself. We have the ground of our existence outside of ourselves. God is not thus dependent. God's self-existence is implied in the name "Jehovah." Ex. 3:14; 6:3.

But lest this should be misconstrued, we add

- b. That God exists by the necessity of His own being. It is His nature to be. Hence the existence of God is not a contingent but a necessary existence. It is grounded, not in His volitions, but in His nature.

NOTE—God's essence is not His act, not only because this would imply that He could destroy Himself, but also because before willing there must be being. Those who hold God's essence to be simple activity are impelled to this view by the fear of postulating some dead thing in God which precedes all exercise of faculty.

B. Immutability.

By this we mean that the nature, attributes, and will of God are exempt from all change. Reason teaches us that no change is possible in God, whether of increase or decrease, progress or deterioration, contraction or development. All change must be to better or to worse. But God is absolute perfection, and no change to better is possible. Change to worse would be equally inconsistent with perfection. No cause for such change exists, either outside of God or in God Himself. Ps. 102:27; Mal. 3:6; Jas. 1:17.

The passages of Scripture which seem at first sight to ascribe change to God are to be explained in one of three ways:

- (a) As illustrations of the varied methods in which God manifests His immutable truth and wisdom in creation.

NOTE—Mathematical principles receive new application with each successive stage of creation. The law of cohesion gives place to chemical law, and chemistry yields to vital forces, but through all these changes there is a divine truth and wisdom which is unchanging, and which reduces all to rational order. Immutability is not stereotyped sameness but impossibility of deviation by one hair's breadth from the course which is best.

- (b) As anthropomorphic representations of the revelation of God's unchanging attributes in the changing circumstances varying moral conditions of creatures.

NOTE—Gen. 6:6—"It repented Jehovah that He made man"—is to be interpreted in the light of Num. 23:19—"God is not a man, that He should lie; neither the Son of Man, that He should repent."—Cf. I Sam. 15:11 with 15:29. God's unchanging holiness requires Him to treat the wicked different from the righteous. When the righteous become wicked, His treatment of them must change. The sun is not fickle or partial because it melts the wax but hardens the clay,—the change is not in the sun but in the objects it shines upon. When a man bicycling against the wind turns about and goes with the wind instead of going against it, the wind seems to change, though it is blowing just as it was before.

- (c) As describing executions, in time, of purposes eternally existing in the mind of God. Immutability must not be confounded with immobility. This would deny all those imperative volitions of God by which He enters into history. The Scriptures assure us that creation, miracles, incarnation, regeneration, are immediate acts of God. Immutability is consistent with constant activity and perfect freedom.

NOTE—The abolition of the Mosaic dispensation indicates no change in God's plan; it is rather the execution of His plan. Christ's coming and work were no sudden make-shift, to remedy unforeseen defects in the Old Testament scheme: Christ came rather in "the fullness of the time" (Gal. 4:4) to fulfill the "counsel" of God (Acts 2:23).

C. Unity.

By this we mean that the Divine nature is undivided and indivisible, and that there is but one Infinite and perfect spirit. Deut. 6:4; Isa. 44:6; John 5:44; John 17:3; I Cor. 8:4; I Tim. 1:17; I Tim. 6:1; Eph. 4:5-6.

Against polytheism, tritheism or dualism, we may urge that the notion of two or more gods is self-contradictory; since each limits the other and destroys his godhead. In the nature of things, infinity and absolute perfection are possible only to one. It is unphilosophical, moreover, to assume the existence of two or more gods, when one will explain all the facts. The unity of God is, however, in no way inconsistent with the doctrine of the trinity; for, while this doctrine holds to the existence of hypostatical, or personal distinctions in the Divine nature, it also holds that this Divine nature is numerically and eternally one.

(3). Perfection and the Attributes Therein Involved.

By perfection, we mean not mere quantitative completeness but qualitative excellence. The attributes involved in perfection are moral attributes. Right action among men presupposes a perfect moral organization, a normal state of intellect, affection and will. So God's activity presupposes a principle of intelligence, affection, volition, in His inmost being, and the existence of a worthy object for each of these powers of His nature. But in eternity past there is nothing existing outside or apart from God. He must find, and He does find the sufficient object of intellect, affection and will in Himself. There is a self-knowing, self-loving, a self-willing which constitutes His absolute perfection. The consideration of the immanent attributes is, therefore, properly concluded with an account of that truth, love, and holiness which render God entirely sufficient to Himself. Matt. 5:48; Rom. 12:2; Col. 1:28; Deut. 32:4; Psa. 18:30.

A. Truth.

By truth we mean that attribute of the Divine nature in virtue of which God's being and God's knowledge eternally conform to each other. In further explanation we remark:

a. Negatively:

- (a) The immanent truth of God is not to be confounded with that veracity and faithfulness which partially manifest it to creatures. These are transitive truths and they presuppose the absolute and immanent attribute. Deut. 32:4; John 17:3; I John 5:20.
- (b) Truth in God is not a merely active attribute of the Divine nature. God is truth, not only in the sense that He is the being that truly knows, but also in the sense that He is the truth that is known. The passive precedes the active; truth of being precedes truth of knowing. He is not simply the medium but also the object of all knowledge. Christ as the revealer of God is the truth. John 14:6; Eph. 4:20.

b. Positively:

- (a) All truth among men, whether mathematical, logical, moral or religious, is to be regarded as having its foundation in this immanent truth of the Divine nature and as disclosing facts in the being of God.
- (b) This attribute, therefore, constitutes the principle and guarantee of all revelation, while it shows the possibility of an eternal, Divine self-contemplation apart from and before all creation. It is to be understood only in the light of the doctrine of the trinity.

B. Love.

By love we mean that attribute of the Divine nature in virtue of which God is eternally moved to self-communication. I John 4:8; I John 3:16; John 17:24; Rom. 15:30. In further explanation we remark:

a. Negatively:

- (a) The immanent love of God is not to be confounded with mercy and goodness toward creatures. These are manifestations, and are to be denominated transitive love.
- (b) Love is not the all-inclusive ethical attribute of God. It does not include truth, nor does it include holiness.
- (c) Nor is God's love mere regard for being in general, irrespective of its moral quality.
- (d) God's love is not a merely emotional affection, proceeding from sense or impulse, nor is it prompted by utilitarian considerations.

NOTE—Of the two words for love in the New Testament, one designates an emotional affection, which is not and cannot be commanded (John 11:36), while the other expresses a rational and benevolent affection which springs from deliberate choice, (Matt. 19:19 and 5:44).

b. Positively:

- (a) The immanent love of God is a rational and voluntary affection grounded in perfect reason and deliberate choice.
- (b) Since God's love is rational, it involves a subordination of the emotional element to a higher law than itself, namely, that of truth and holiness.
- (c) The immanent love of God, therefore, requires and finds a perfect standard in His own holiness and a personal object in the image of His own infinite perfections. It is to be understood only in the light of the doctrine of the trinity.
- (d) The immanent love of God constitutes a ground of the divine blessedness. Since there is an infinite and perfect object of love, as well as of knowledge and will, in God's own nature, the existence of the universe is not necessary to His serenity and joy.

NOTE—Blessedness is not itself a Divine attribute; it is rather a result of the exercise of the Divine attributes. It is a subjective result of this exercise, as glory is an objective result. Perfect faculties, with perfect objects for their exercise, insure God's blessedness. But love is especially its source. Acts 20:35. Happiness is grounded in circumstances, blessedness in character.

- (e) The love of God involves also the possibility of Divine suffering, and the suffering on account of sin, which holiness necessitates on the part of God, is itself the atonement. Rev. 13:8.

C. Holiness.

Holiness is self-affirming purity. In virtue of this attribute of His nature, God eternally wills and maintains His own moral excellence. In this definition are contained three elements: first, purity; secondly, purity willing; thirdly, purity willing itself. Ex. 15:11; 19:10-16; Isa. 6:3; II Cor. 7:1; I Thess. 3:13; 4:7; Heb. 12:29. These passages show that holiness is the opposite to impurity, that it is itself purity. In further explanation we remark:

a. Negatively, that holiness is not

- (a) Justice, or purity demanding purity from creatures. Justice, the relative or transitive attribute, is indeed the manifestation and expression of the immanent attribute of holiness, but it is not to be confounded with it.
- (b) Holiness is not a complex term designating the aggregate of the Divine perfections. On the other hand, the notion of holiness is, both in Scripture and in Christian experience, perfectly simple, and perfectly distinct from that of other attributes.
- (c) Holiness is not God's self-love, in the sense of supreme regard for His own interest and happiness. There is no utilitarian element in holiness.
- (d) Holiness is not identical with, or a manifestation of, love. Since self-maintenance must precede self-impartation, and since benevolence has its object, motive, standard and limit in righteousness, holiness the self-affirming attribute can in no way be resolved into love, the self-communicating.

b. Positively, that holiness is

- (a) Purity of substance.—In God's moral nature, as necessarily acting, there are indeed the two elements of willing and being. But the passive logically precedes the active; being comes before willing; God is pure before he wills purity. Since purity, however, in ordinary usage is a negative term and means only freedom from stain or wrong, we must include in it also the positive idea of moral rightness. God is holy in that He is the source and standard of the right.

- (b) Energy of will.—This purity is not simply a passive and dead quality; it is the attribute of a personal being; it is penetrated and pervaded by will. Holiness is the free moral movement of the Godhead.
- (c) Self-affirmation.—Holiness is God's self-willing. His own purity is the supreme object of His regard and maintenance. God is holy, in that His infinite moral excellence affirms and asserts itself as the highest possible motive and end. Like truth and love, this attribute can be understood only in the light of the doctrine of the Trinity.

2. Relative, or Transitive Attributes.

(1). Attributes Having Relation to Time and Space.

A. Eternity.

By this we mean that God's nature is without beginning or end; is free from all succession of time and contains in itself the cause of time. Deut. 32:40; Psal. 90:2; 102:27; Gen. 21:33; Jude 25; I Tim. 1:17.

Eternity is infinity in its relation to time. It implies that God's nature is not subject to the laws of time. God is not in time. It is more correct to say that time is in God. Although there is logical succession in God's thoughts, there is no chronological succession; yet we are far from saying that time, now that it exists, has no objective reality to God. To Him, past, present, and future are "one eternal now," not in the sense that there is no distinction between them, but only in the sense that He sees past and future as vividly as He sees the present. With creation time began, and since the succession of history are veritable successions, He who sees according to truth must recognize them.

B. Immensity.

By this we mean that God's nature is without extension, is subject to no limitations of space, and contains in itself the cause of space. Immensity is infinity in its relation to space. God's nature is not subject to the laws of space. It is more correct to say that space is within God; yet space has an objective reality to God. With creation space began to be, and since God sees according to truth, He recognizes relations of space in His creation.

(2) Attributes Having Relation to Creation.

A. Omnipresence.

By this we mean that God, in the totality of His essence, without diffusion or expansion, multiplication or division, penetrates and fills the universe in all its parts. Psal. 139:7-10; Jer. 23:23-24; Acts 17:27-28.

In explanation of this attribute we may say:

- a. God's omnipresence is not potential but essential. We reject the Socinian representation that God's essence is in heaven, only His power on earth. When God is said to "dwell in the heavens" we are to understand the language either as a symbolic expression of exaltation above earthly things, or as a declaration that His most special and glorious self-manifestations are in heaven. Psa. 123:1; Psa. 113:5; Isa. 57:15.
- b. God's omnipresence is not the presence of a part but of the whole of God in every place. This follows from the conception of God as incorporeal. We reject the materialistic representation that God is composed of material elements which can be divided or sundered. There is no multiplication or diffusion of His substance to correspond with the parts of His dominion. The one essence of God is present at the same moment in all. I Kings 8:27; Matt. 18:20; Isa. 57:15.

NOTE—A. J. Gordon says, "In mathematics the whole is equal to the sum of its parts. But we know of the Spirit that every part is equal to the whole. Every church, every true body of Jesus Christ, has just as much of Christ as every other, and each has the whole Christ." Alger, Poetry of the Orient: "Though God extends beyond Creation's rim, each smallest atom holds the whole of Him." From this it follows that the whole Logos or pre-existent Christ can be united to and be present in the man, Christ Jesus, while at the same time He fills and governs the whole universe; and so the whole Christ can be united to, and can be present in, the single believer as fully as if that believer were the only one to receive of His fulness.

- c. God's omnipresence is not necessary but free. We reject the pantheistic notion that God is bound to the universe as the universe is bound to God. God is immanent in the universe, not by compulsion but by the free act of His own will, and this immanence is qualified by His transcendence.

NOTE—God might, at will, cease to be omnipresent, for He could destroy the universe; but while the universe exists, He is and must be in all its parts. God is the life and law of the universe,—this is the truth in pantheism, but He is also personal and free,—this pantheism denies. Christianity holds to a free, as well as to an essential, omnipresence—qualified and supplemented, however, by God's transcendence. The boasted truth in pantheism is an elementary principle of Christianity and is only the stepping stone for a nobler truth—God's personal presence with His church. God's omnipresence assures us that He is present with us to hear, and present in every heart and in the ends of the earth to answer, prayer.

"The parish priest of austerity
Climbed up in a high church steeple,
To be nearer God so that He might Hand His Word down to the people.
And in sermon script He daily wrote
What He thought was sent from heaven,
And He dropt it down on the people's heads
Two times one day in seven.
In His age God said, 'Come down and die,'
And He cried out from the steeple,
'Where art thou, Lord,'
And the Lord replied,
'Down here among my people.'"

B. Omniscience.

By this we mean God's perfect and eternal knowledge of all things which are objects of knowledge, whether they be actual or possible, present or future.

NOTE—God knows His inanimate creation: Psa. 147:4; he has a knowledge of brute creatures: Matt. 10:29; of men and their works: Psa. 33:13-15; of the hearts of men; and their thoughts: Acts 15:8; Psa. 139:2; of our wants: Mat. 6:8; of the least things: Matt. 10:30; of the past: Mal. 3:16; of the future: Isa. 46:9, 10; of men's future free acts: Isa. 44:28; of men's future evil acts: Acts 2:23; of the ideally possible: I Sam. 23:12, Matt. 11:23; from eternity: Acts 15:18; His knowledge is incomprehensible: Psa. 139:6; Rom. 11:33; related to wisdom: Psa. 104:24; Eph. 3:10.

- a. The omniscience of God may be argued from His omnipresence, as well as from His truth or self-knowledge in which the plan of redemption has its eternal ground, and from prophecy which expresses God's omniscience.

NOTE—It is to be remembered that omniscience, as the designation of a relative and transitive attribute, does not include God's self-knowledge. The term is used in the technical sense of God's knowledge of all things that pertain to the universe of His creation. H. A. Gordon: "Light travels faster than sound. You can see the flash of fire from the cannon's mouth a mile away, considerably before the noise of the discharge reaches the ear. God flashed the light of prediction upon the page of His word, and we see it. Wait a little and we see the event itself."

- b. Since it is free from all imperfection, God's knowledge is immediate, as distinguished from the knowledge that comes through sense or imagination; simultaneous, as not acquired by successive observations, or built up by processes of reasoning; distinct, as free from all vagueness, or confusion; true, as perfectly corresponding to the reality of things; eternal, as comprehended in one timeless act of the Divine mind.

NOTE—An infinite mind must always act, and must always act in an absolutely perfect manner. There is in God no sense, symbol, memory, growth, reflection, reasoning.—His knowledge is all direct and without intermediaries. God was properly represented by the ancient Egyptians, not as having eyes, but as being eye. His thoughts toward us are "more than can be numbered," Psa. 40:5, not because there is succession in them, now a remembering and now a forgetting, but because there is never a moment of our existence in which we are out of His mind; He is always thinking of us, Gen. 16:13.

- c. Since God knows things as they are, He knows the necessary sequences of his creation as necessary, the free acts of his creatures as free, the ideally possible as ideally possible. God knows what would have taken place under circumstances not now present; knows what the universe would have been, had He chosen a different plan of creation; knows what our lives would have been, had we made different decisions in the past, Isa. 48:18.
- d. The fact that there is nothing in the present condition of things from which the future actions of free creatures necessarily follow by natural law does not prevent God from foreseeing such actions, since His knowledge is not mediate, but immediate. He not only foreknows the motives which will occasion men's acts, but he directly foreknows the acts themselves. The possibility of such direct knowledge without assignable grounds of knowledge is apparent if we admit that time is a form of finite thought to which the Divine is not subject.

- e. Prescience is not itself causative. It is not to be confounded with the predetermining will of God. Free actions do not take place because they are foreseen, but they are foreseen because they are to take place.

NOTE—Seeing a thing in the future does not cause it to be, more than seeing a thing in the past causes it to be. As to future events, we may say with Whedon: "Knowledge takes them, not makes them."

- f. Omniscience embraces the actual and the possible, but it does not embrace the self-contradictory and the impossible, because these are not objects of knowledge.
- g. Omniscience, as qualified by Holy will, is in Scripture denominated "wisdom." In virtue of His wisdom, God chooses the highest ends and uses the fittest means to accomplish them.

NOTE—Wisdom is not simply estimating all things at their proper value; it has in it also the element of counsel and purpose. It has been defined as "the talent of using one's talents." It implies two things: first, choice of the highest end; secondly, choice of the best means to secure this end.

C. Omnipotence

By this we mean the power of God to do all things which are objects of power, whether with or without the use of means, Gen. 17:1.

NOTE—He performs natural wonders, Gen. 1:1-3; Isa. 44:24; Heb. 1:3; Spiritual wonders, II Cor. 4:6; Eph. 1:19; Eph. 3:20. He has power to create new things, Matt. 3:9; Rom. 4:17; after his own pleasure: Psa. 115:3; Eph. 1:11. There is nothing impossible to Him: Gen. 18:14; Matt. 19:26.

- a. Omnipotence does not imply power to do that which is not an object of power; as, for example, that which is self-contradictory or contradictory to the nature of God.

NOTE—Self-contradictory things are not included in the exercise of God's omnipotence,—such as the making of a past event to have not occurred (hence the uselessness of praying: "May it be that much good was done"); drawing a shorter than a straight line between two given points; putting two separate mountains together without a valley between them. Things contradictory to the nature of God; for God to lie, to sin, to die. To do such things would not imply power, but impotence. God has all the power that is consistent with infinite perfection—all power to do what is worthy of Himself.

- b. Omnipotence does not imply the exercise of all His power on the part of God. He has power over His power; in other words, His power is under the control of wise and holy will. God can do all He will, but He will not do all He can. Else His power is mere force acting necessarily, and God is the slave of His own omnipotence.
- c. Omnipotence in God does not exclude, but implies, the power of self-limitation. Since all such limitation is free, proceeding from neither external nor internal compulsion, it is the act and manifestation of God's power. Human freedom is not rendered impossible by the Divine omnipotence, but exists by virtue of it. It is an act of omnipotence when God humbles Himself to the taking of human flesh in the person of Jesus Christ.

(3) Attributes Having Relation to Moral Beings.

A. Veracity and Faithfulness, or Transitive Truth.

By veracity and faithfulness we mean the transitive truth of God in its two-fold relation to His creatures in general and to His redeemed people in particular: Psa. 138:2; John 3:33; Rom. 3:4; Rom. 1:25; John 14:17; I John 5:7; I Cor. 1:9; I Thes. 5:24; I Pet. 4:19; II Cor. 1:20; Num. 23:19; Tit. 1:2; Heb. 6:18.

- a. In virtue of His veracity, all His revelations to creatures consist with His essential being and with each other.

NOTE—In God's veracity, we have the guarantee that our faculties in their normal exercise do not deceive us; that the laws of thought are also laws of things; that the external world, and second causes in it, have objective existence, that the same causes will always produce the same effects; that the threats of the moral nature will be executed upon the unrepentant transgressor; that man's moral nature is made in the image of God's; and that we may draw just conclusions from what conscience is in us to what holiness is in Him. We may, therefore, expect that all past revelations, whether in nature or in His Word, will not only not be contradicted by our future knowledge, but will rather prove to have in them more of truth than we ever dreamed. Man's word may pass away, but God's word abides forever: Matt. 5:18; Isa. 40:8.

- b. In virtue of His Faithfulness, God fulfills all his promises to His people, whether expressed in words, or implied in the constitution He has given them.

NOTE—In God's faithfulness, we have the sure ground of confidence that He will perform what His love has led Him to promise to those who obey the Gospel. Since His promises are based, not upon what we are or have done, but upon what Christ is and has done, our defects and errors do not invalidate them so long as we are truly penitent and believing: I John 1:9,—“Faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins”—Faithful to His promise, and righteous to Christ. God's faithfulness also insures a supply for all the real wants of our beings, both here and hereafter; since these wants are implicit promises of Him who made us: Psa. 84:11; Psa. 91:4; Matt. 6:33; I Cor. 2:9.

B. Mercy and Goodness, or Transitive Love.

By mercy and goodness, we mean the transitive love of God in its two-fold relation to the disobedient and to the obedient portions of His creatures: Tit. 3:4; Rom. 2:4; Matt. 5:44, 45; John 3:16; II Pet. 1:3; Rom. 8:32; I John 4:10.

- a. Mercy is that eternal principle of God's nature which leads Him to seek the temporal good and eternal salvation of those who have opposed themselves to His will, even at the cost of infinite self-sacrifice.
- b. Goodness is the eternal principle of God's nature which leads Him to communicate of His own life and blessedness to those who are like Him in moral character. Goodness, therefore, is nearly identical with the love of complacency; mercy, with the love of benevolence.

C. Justice and Righteousness, or Transitive Holiness.

By Justice and Righteousness, we mean the transitive holiness of God, in virtue of which His treatment of His creatures conforms to the purity of His nature,—righteousness demanding from all moral beings conformity to the moral perfection of God, and justice visiting non-conformity to that perfection with penal loss or suffering: Gen. 18:25; Deut. 32:4; Psa. 5:5; Psa. 7:9-12; Psa. 18:24-26; Matt. 5:48; Rom. 2:6; I Pet. 1:16. These passages show that God loves the same persons whom he hates. It is not true that he hates the sin, but loves the sinner; he both hates and loves the sinner himself, hates him as he is a living and wilful antagonist of truth and holiness, loves him as he is a creature, capable of good and ruined by his transgression. There is no abstract sin that can be hated apart from the persons in whom that sin is represented and embodied. Thomas Fuller found it difficult to starve the profaneness but to feed the person of the impudent beggar who applied to him for food. Mr. Finney declared that he would kill the slave-catcher, but would love him with all his heart. In our civil war, Dr. Kirk said: "God knows that we love the rebels, but God also knows that we will kill them if they do not lay down their arms." The complex nature of God not only permits but necessitates this same double treatment of the sinner, and the earthly father experiences the same conflict of emotions when his heart yearns over the corrupt son whom he is compelled to banish from the household. Moberly, Atonement and Personality, 7—"It is the sinner who is punished, not the sin."

- a. Since Justice and Righteousness are simply transitive holiness—Righteousness designating this holiness chiefly in its mandatory, Justice chiefly in its punitive, aspect,—they are not mere manifestations of benevolence, or of God's disposition to secure the highest happiness of His creatures, nor are they grounded in the nature of things as something apart from or above God
- b. Transitive Holiness, as Righteousness, imposes law as conscience and Scripture, and may be called legislative Holiness. As Justice, it executes the penalties of the law and may be called distributive or judicial holiness. In Righteousness, God reveals chiefly His love of holiness; in Justice, chiefly His hatred of sin.
- c. Neither Justice, nor Righteousness, therefore, is a matter of arbitrary will. They are revelations of the inmost nature of God, the one in the form of moral requirement, the other in the form of judicial sanction. As God cannot but demand of His creatures that they be like Him in moral character, so He cannot but enforce the law which He imposes upon them. Justice just as much binds God to punish as it binds the sinner to be punished.
- d. Neither Justice nor Righteousness bestows rewards. This follows from the fact that obedience is due to God, instead of being optional or a gratuity. No creature can claim anything for his obedience. If God rewards, He rewards in virtue of His goodness and faithfulness, not in virtue of His Justice nor Righteousness. What the creature cannot claim, however, Christ can claim, and the rewards which are goodness to the creature are Righteousness to Christ. God rewards Christ's work in us and for us: Mt. 25:34, 46; Lk. 17:7-10; Rom. 6:23.

- e. Justice in God, as the revelation of His holiness, is devoid of all passion or caprice. There is in God no selfish anger. The penalties He inflicts upon transgression are not vindictive but vindicative. They express the revulsion of God's nature from moral evil, the judicial indignation of purity against impurity, the self-assertion of infinite holiness against its antagonist and would-be destroyer. But because its decisions are calm, they are irreversible.

NOTE—Anger, within certain limits, is a duty of man: Psa. 97:10; Eph. 4:26. The calm indignation of the judge, who pronounces sentence with tears, is the true image of the holy anger of God against sin. Gaston de Foix, the old chronicler admirably wrote: "He loved what ought to be loved, and hated what ought to be hated, and never had a miscreant with Him." See also Psa. 101:5, 6 and I Kings 11:9. Even Horace Bushnell spoke of the "wrath-principle" in God. Jesus' anger was no less notable than His love. The love of the right involved hatred of the wrong. Those may hate who hate evil for its hatefulness and for the sake of God. Hate sin in yourself first, and then you may hate it in itself and in the world. Be angry only in Christ and with the wrath of God.

C TRINITY OF GOD.

I Definition of the Doctrine.

The Trinity of God is His tri-personal existence as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. In the nature of the one God, there are three eternal distinctions which are represented to us under the figure of persons, and these three are equal. This tri-personality of the Godhead is exclusively a truth of revelation. It is clearly, though not formally, made known in the New Testament, and intimations of it may be found in the Old. The Trinity may be expressed in the following statements:

- 1 In Scripture there are three who are recognized as God.
 - A. The Father is recognized as God: John 6:27; I Pet. 1:2.
 - B. Jesus Christ is recognized as God: John 1:1, 18; Tit. 2:13.
 - C. The Holy Spirit is recognized as God: Acts 5:3, 4.
- 2 These three are so described in Scripture that we are compelled to conceive of them as distinct persons.
 - A. The Father and the Son are persons distinct from each other.
 - a. Christ distinguishes the Father from Himself as "another:" John 5:32, 37.
 - b. The Father and the Son are distinguished as the begetter and the begotten: Ps. 2:7; John 1:14; 3:16.
 - c. The Father and the Son are distinguished as the sender and the sent: John 10:36; Gal. 4:4.
 - B. The Father and Son are persons distinct from the Holy Spirit.

- a. Jesus distinguishes the Spirit from Himself and from the Father: John 14:16, 17.
 - b. The Spirit proceeds from the Father: John 15:26.
 - c. The Spirit is sent by the Father and by the Son: John 14:26; 15:26; Gal. 4:6.
- 3 The tri-personality of the Divine nature is not merely economic, or modal in manifestation, nor temporal, but immanent and eternal. There are Scriptural proofs of this:
- A. There are passages of Scripture which speak of the existence of the Word from eternity with the Father: John 1:1, 2; Phil. 2:6.
 - B. There are passages that assert and imply Christ's pre-existence: Col. 1:15-17; John 8:58; John 1:18, R. V.
 - C. There are passages implying intercourse between the Father and the Son before the foundation of the world: John 17:5, 24.
 - D. There are passages that assert that the world was created by Christ: John 1:3; I Cor. 8:6; Col. 1:16; Heb. 1:2, 10.
 - E. There are passages which assert and imply the eternity of the Holy Spirit: Heb. 9:14; Gen. 1:2; Ps. 33:6.
- 4 This tri-personality is not tritheism; for, while there are three persons, there is but one essence.
- A. The term "person" only approximately represents the truth. Although this word, more nearly than any other single word, expresses the conception which the Scriptures give us of the relation between the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, it is not itself used in this connection in Scripture, and we employ it in a qualified sense, not in the ordinary sense in which we apply the word "person" to Peter, Paul, and John.
 - B. The necessary qualification is that, while three persons among men have only a specific unity of nature or essence—that is, have the same species of nature or essence,—the persons of the Godhead have a numerical unity of nature or essence—that is, have the same nature or essence. The undivided essence of the Godhead belongs equally to each of the persons: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; each possesses all the substance and all the attributes of deity. The plurality of the Godhead is, therefore, not a plurality of essence, but a plurality of hypostatical, or personal, distinctions. God is not three and one, but three in one. The one indivisible essence has three modes of subsistence.

NOTE—The Trinity is not simply a partnership, in which each member can sign the name of the firm; for this is unity of council and operation only, not of essence. God's nature is not an abstract but an organic unity. The one Divine being exists in three modes. The life of the vine makes itself known in the life of the branches, and this union between vine and branches Christ uses to illustrate the union between the Father and Himself. See John 15:5, 10, also 17:22, 23.

C. This oneness of essence explains the fact that while Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, as respects their personality are distinct subsistences, there is an intercommunion of persons and an immanence of one Divine person in another which permits the peculiar work of one to be ascribed, with a single limitation, to either of the others, and the manifestation of one to be recognized in the manifestation of another. The limitation is simply this, that although the Son was sent by the Father, and the Spirit by the Father and the Son, it cannot be said, vice versa, that the Father is sent, either by the Son, or by the Spirit. The Scripture representations of this intercommunion prevent us from conceiving of the distinctions called Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, as involving separation between them.

5 The three persons, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are equal. In explanation, notice that:

A. These titles belong to the persons.

a. The Father is not God as such; for God is not only Father, but also Son and Holy Spirit. The term "Father" designates that personal distinction in the Divine nature, in virtue of which God is related to the Son, and through the Son and the Spirit, to the church.

b. The Son is not God as such; for God is not only Son, but also Father and Holy Spirit. The Son designates that distinction, in virtue of which God is related to the Father, is sent by the Father to redeem the world, and with the Father sends the Holy Spirit.

c. The Holy Spirit is not God as such; for God is not only Holy Spirit, but also Father and Son. The Holy Spirit designates that distinction, in virtue of which God is related to the Father and the Son, and is sent by them to accomplish the work of renewing the ungodly and sanctifying the church.

B. Qualified use of these titles.

Like the word "person," the names Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are not to be confined within the precise limitations of meaning which would be required if they were applied to men.

6 The Trinity of God is inscrutable yet not self-contradictory.

A. The mode of this triune existence is inscrutable. It is inscrutable because there are no analogies to it in our finite experience. For this reason, all attempts to adequately represent it are vain.

a. From inanimate things—as the fountain, the stream, and the rivulet, trickling from it; the cloud, the rain, and the rising mist; color, shape, and size; the actinic, luminiferous, and calorific principles in a ray of the sun.

- b. From the constitution or processes of our minds—as the psychological unity of intellect, affection, and will; the logical unity of thesis, antithesis, and synthesis; the metaphysical unity of subject, object, and subject-object.

No one of these furnishes any proper analogue of the Trinity, since in no one of them is there found the essential element of tri-personality. Such illustrations may some time be used to disarm objection, but they furnish no positive explanation of the mystery of the Trinity, and unless carefully guarded, may lead to grievous error.

- B. The doctrine of the Trinity is not self-contradictory. This it would be, only if it declared God to be Three in the same numerical sense in which He is said to be One. This we do not assert. We assert simply that the same God who is one with respect to His essence is three with respect to the internal distinctions of that essence, or with respect to the modes of His being. The possibility of this can not be denied, except by assuming that the human mind is in all respects the measure of the Divine. The fact that the ascending scale of life is marked by increasing differentiation of faculty and function should rather lead us to expect in the highest of all beings, a nature more complex than our own.

STUDY QUESTIONS ON THEOLOGY (Proper)

1. Name and define six false systems of Theology or views of God.
2. Define Theism and Monotheism.
3. Give four Scriptural descriptions of God with reference.
4. What is the origin of the idea of God?
5. What is a rational intuition viewed both logically and chronologically?
6. What is the simple meaning of intuition and from what is it to be distinguished?
7. Give three negative definitions of a first truth and the reasons for them.
8. Give a positive definition of a first truth.
9. What does the logical priority of a first truth make necessary?
10. How many and what are the criteria by which first truths are tested?
11. What is meant by universality, necessity, and logical independence and priority, as criteria of first truths and how does belief in God meet these tests?
12. What is the four-fold content of belief in God's existence, as a first truth or rational intuition.
13. Give three supposed sources of the origin of the idea of God and show how these are impossible as such.
14. What is the attitude of the Scriptures and the writers of the Scriptures toward the existence of God?
15. What do the Scriptures announce and declare concerning God?
16. What five-fold line of corroborative truth may be given of the existence of God?
17. What may be said concerning the value of these arguments and why?
18. Give the meaning, value, and defects of the cosmological argument.
19. Give the meaning, value, and defects of the teleological argument.
20. Give the meaning, value, and defects of the anthropological argument.
21. Give the content and value of the Christological argument.
22. Define congruity and explain the argument therefrom.
23. What are we compelled to do through the contemplation of the words and acts of God as well as those of men?
24. What do we call these permanent and uniform sources of expression and action and what do they show concerning the natural course of investigation, in the study of God?
25. Define the term Attributes of God.
26. Why do we call them attributes?
27. What kind of an existence do the attributes of God have and from what are they distinguishable?
28. In what do they inhere and what, therefore, are they?
29. From what personal distinctions and personal relations are the Divine attributes to be distinguished?

30. Of what are the attributes of God the manifestation and the medium?
31. Name and define the two methods of determining the Divine attributes.
32. What are the two great classes into which the Divine attributes may be divided? Give definition of each.
33. What is the three-fold division of the Absolute or Immanent Attributes and what are the sub-divisions of these?
34. Give the divisions and sub-divisions of the Relative and Transitive attributes.
35. What is meant by Spirituality when applied to God?
36. What is taught in the passages of Scripture cited concerning God's nature, with reference to matter and in relation to the material?
37. How are those passages to be regarded which ascribe the possession of bodily parts and organs to God?
38. How are the appearances which God made to the patriarchs to be explained?
39. What two attributes does the Spirituality of God involve?
40. Quote one passage of Scripture which represents God as the living God.
41. Give the two negative and one positive definitions of Life.
42. What is meant by Personality?
43. What are self-consciousness and self-determination to be distinguished from, and why?
44. Give three declarations given in Scripture which express personality and quote one passage with each.
45. What is meant by Infinity?
46. Where does the idea of Infinity take its rise?
47. What does the Infinity of God not involve nor prevent?
48. What does Infinity in God imply with reference to relations and limitations?
49. In what sense are we to conceive of the Infinity of God, extensively or intensively?
50. What do we mean by Self-existence?
51. What kind of an existence does God have, necessary or contingent, and in what is it grounded?
52. What is meant by Immutability?
53. What does reason teach us concerning change in God, and why?
54. In what three ways may the passages be explained which seem to ascribe change to God?
55. What is meant by the Unity of God?
56. Quote one passage proving the Unity of God.
57. Why is the notion of two or more Gods self-contradictory?
58. What do we mean by the perfections of God?
59. What does right action among men and the activity of God pre-suppose?
60. What did God's previous solitary existence necessitate concerning Himself?

61. What three-fold capacity must have been possessed by God from all eternity?
62. What do we mean by Truth as applied to God?
63. With what is not the Immanent Truth of God to be confounded, and why?
64. Why is Truth in God not merely an active attribute?
65. How is all truth among men to be regarded?
66. Of what is the attribute of Truth the principle and guarantee?
67. What do we mean by Love in God? Quote one passage illustrating it.
68. Give three negative explanations of the Immanent Love of God.
69. Give four positive statements concerning the Immanent Love of God.
70. Define Holiness as applied to God and quote one passage of Scripture proving that God is holy.
71. Give four negative explanations of God's holiness.
72. Give three positive statements concerning the holiness of God.
73. Define the Eternity of God and quote one passage proving it.
74. What does Eternity, as Infinity in relation to time, imply?
75. In what sense are past, present, and future an eternal Now with God?
76. What is meant by Immensity as applied to God?
77. Define Omnipresence and quote Psalm 139:7-10, proving it.
78. Give three negative statements concerning God's Omnipresence.
79. Define Omniscience and quote one passage proving it.
80. From what three facts may God's Omniscience be argued?
81. Give some of the objects of knowledge which are included in God's Omniscience.
82. Give the characteristics of God's knowledge, as being perfect.
83. Why does not the fact that there is nothing in the present condition of things that determines the actions of free creatures prevent God from knowing such actions?
84. What is to be said of prescience, negatively, and with what is it not to be confounded?
85. What does God's Omniscience embrace and not embrace?
86. What is Omniscience as qualified by holy will denominated and in virtue of which what does God do?
87. Define Omnipotence and quote one passage proving it.
88. What two things does Omnipotence not imply and what one thing does it not exclude?
89. What is meant by Veracity and Faithfulness as applied to God?
90. In virtue of His Veracity, what is true of God? Of His Faithfulness?
91. Define Mercy and Goodness in general and particular.
92. Define Righteousness and Justice in general and particular.
93. What are the two aspects of Transitive Holiness represented respectively by Righteousness and Justice?

94. What may Transitive Holiness, as Righteousness, imposing law in conscience and Scripture, be called?
95. What may Justice, as executing the penalties of law, be called?
96. Why can neither Righteousness nor Justice bestow rewards upon creatures?
97. Of what is Justice in God devoid and of what nature are the penalties which He inflicts upon transgression?
98. Define the Trinity.
99. In what three-fold sense is God recognized in Scripture?
100. What does the scriptural description of the members of the Trinity compel?
101. Give the three-fold way in which the Father and the Son are shown to be distinct from each other, with reference.
102. Give the three-fold way in which the Father and the Son are shown to be distinct from the Holy Spirit, with references.
103. Give the five-fold proof that the tri-personality of the Divine nature is not merely economical or model manifestations, and temporal, but immanent and eternal. Quote one passage with each.
104. From what is tri-personality to be distinguished, and why?
105. What qualification is necessary to show the distinctions between the unity of nature among men and that of the persons of the Godhead?
106. To whom do the titles of the Trinity belong and why?
107. In what sense are the titles of the members of the Trinity to be used?
108. Why is the doctrine of the Trinity inscrutable?
109. When would the doctrine of the Trinity be self-contradictory, and why does not the present interpretation make it so?

CHRISTOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF JESUS CHRIST

A. THE PERSON OF JESUS CHRIST.

- I. HISTORICAL PREPARATION FOR HIS COMING.
- II. HISTORICAL SURVEY OF VIEWS RESPECTING THE PERSON OF CHRIST.
- III. THE PRE-EXISTENCE OF CHRIST.
- IV. THE INCARNATION OF CHRIST.

B. THE SAVING WORK OF CHRIST.

- I. THE THREE-FOLD OFFICE OF CHRIST.
- II. THE ATONING DEATH OF CHRIST.

Number Two. CHRISTOLOGY, OR THE DOCTRINE OF JESUS CHRIST

A. THE PERSON OF JESUS CHRIST.

- I. Historical preparation for His coming and the spread of the Gospel. Since God had from eternity determined to redeem mankind, the history of the race from the time of the fall to the coming of Christ was providentially arranged to prepare the way for this redemption. The preparation was two-fold:

1. Negative preparation,—In the history of the heathen world.
 - (1) This showed the true nature of sin, and the depth of spiritual ignorance, and of moral depravity to which the race, left to itself, must fall.
 - (2) It also shows the powerlessness of human nature to preserve or regain an adequate knowledge of God, or to deliver itself from sin by philosophy or art.
2. Positive preparation,—In the history of Israel. A single people was separated from all others, from the time of Abraham, and was educated in three great truths:
 - (1) The majesty of God, in His Unity, Omnipotence, and Holiness.
 - (2) The sinfulness of man and his hopelessness.
 - (3) The certainty of coming salvation.This education from the time of Moses was conducted by the use of three principal agencies.

A. The law,—Mosaic legislation:

- a. By its theophanies and miracles, cultivated faith in a personal and almighty God and Judge.
- b. By its commands and threatenings, awakened the sense of sin.
- c. By its priestly and sacrificial system, inspired hope of some way of pardon and access to God.

B. Prophecy.—This was of two kinds:

- a. Verbal,—Beginning with the protoevangelium in the garden and extending within four-hundred years of the coming of Christ.
- b. Typical,—In persons, as Adam, Melchisedec, Joseph, Moses, Joshua, David, Solomon, Jonah; and in acts, as Isaac's sacrifice, and Moses' lifting the serpent in the wilderness.

- C. Judgment.—Repeated Divine chastisements for idolatry culminated in the overthrow of the kingdom, and the captivity of the Jews. The exile had two principal effects:
- a. Religious,—in giving monotheism firm root in the hearts of the people, and in leading to the establishment of the synagogue system, by which, thereafter, monotheism was preserved and propagated.

- b. Civil,—in converting the Jews from an agricultural to a trading people, scattering them among all nations, and finally imbuing them with the spirit of Roman law and organization. Thus a people was made ready to receive the Gospel and propagate it throughout the world at the very time when the world had become conscious of its needs, and through its greatest philosophers and poets, was expressing its longings for deliverance.

II Historical Survey of Views Respecting the Person of Christ.

1. Ebionism (A. D. 107).

Ebionism was the denial of the Divine nature of Christ. It held our Lord to be merely man, whether naturally or supernaturally conceived. As a man, however, it was believed that he held a peculiar relation to God, in that from the time of His baptism, an unmeasured fullness of the Divine Spirit rested upon Him. Ebionism was simply Judaism within the pale of the Christian church, and its denial of Christ's Godhood was occasioned by an apparent incompatibility of this Doctrine with monotheism.

2. Cerinthianism,—this heresy originated with Cerinthus, a heretic, who lived in the days of the Apostle John. It was an offshoot of Ebionism, holding that there was no real and essential union of the two natures of Christ prior to His baptism. This error founded the deity of Christ, not on the supernatural birth, but on His baptism and endowment of the Spirit.

3. Docetism,—The term comes from a Greek word signifying to seem or appear. This error flourished from the last part of the first to the latter part of the second century. It was the denial of the humanity of Christ, and was attacked by the Apostle John in his first epistle (4:1-3). In denying the reality of Christ's body, Docetism showed its connection with Gnosticism and Manicheism. This view was the logical sequence of their assumption of the inherent evil of matter. If matter was evil and Christ was pure, then Christ's human body must have been merely phantasmal. Docetism was simply pagan philosophy introduced into the church.

4. Arianism,—Arius, a presbyter of the church of Alexandria, Egypt, in the fourth century, denied the deity of Christ and also His eternal generation from the Father. This heresy was condemned at the council at Nice, 325 A. D. Arius regarded the Logos, who united himself to humanity in Jesus Christ, not as possessed of absolute Godhead, but as the first and highest of created beings. This view originated in a misinterpretation of the scriptural accounts of Christ's state of humiliation, and in mistaking temporary subordination for original and permanent inequality.

6. Nestorianism,—Nestorius, Bishop of the church at Constantinople, in the fourth century denied the unique personality of Christ by separating and erecting the two natures into distinct persons. Thus he made of our Lord two persons instead of one.
7. Eutychianism,—Eutyches, an Abbot of Constantinople, in the fifth century denied the integrity of our Lord's two natures and held a mingling of both into one which constituted a tertium quid or third nature. Since in this case the Divine must overpower the human, it follows that the human was absorbed into or transmuted into the Divine, although the Divine was not in all respects the same, after the union, that it was before. Hence, the Eutychians were often called monophysites, because they virtually reduced the two natures to one.
8. The Orthodox Interpretation, (Promulgated at Chalcedon, A. D. 451),—holds that in the one person, Jesus Christ, there are two natures, a human nature and a Divine nature, each in its completeness and integrity, and that these two natures are organically and indissolubly united, yet so that no third nature is formed thereby. In brief, the orthodox doctrine forbids us either to divide the person or confound the natures.

III The Pre-existence of Christ.

The Scriptures clearly and distinctly teach that, as the second person of the Trinity, Jesus Christ existed before his incarnation: John 1:1-5; 8:58; 17:5, 24; Col. 1:13-17; Heb. 1:2, 8; 2:10.

NOTE—The nature of this pre-existence was two-fold, viz: as to God, and as to creation.

As to God, Jesus Christ was "the only begotten Son:" John 1:14, 18; 3:16, 18; 1 John 4:9. As the Son, "the only begotten of the Father," Jesus Christ was begotten not in time, but in eternity. Theologically, this truth is called, "the eternal generation of the Son." In the historical development of the doctrine of the Trinity in the Scriptures, not the Father, the first person, but Christ, the second person, is first revealed. His sonship was the infinite and positional relation which he sustained to the other members of the Trinity from all Eternity. See with the above passages: II Sam. 7:12-17; Psa. 2:7-9; 89:24-29.

As to Creation, Jesus Christ is "the first born:" Rom. 8:29; Col. 1:15, 18. In Col. 1:15, Jesus Christ is declared to be "the first-born of every creature" (R. V. of all creation); while in verse eighteen, He is declared to be "the first-born from the dead." These, then, are the two relations in which He is first born; in creation and in resurrection. As applied to Christ, believers can not share the title "only begotten," but by spiritual sonship and resurrection, we share with him His title of "first-born:" Rom. 8:29; Heb. 12:23. In the latter passage, the Greek word "first-born" is in the plural. See Rev. 3:14.

The character of the pre-existence of Christ can not be better expressed than that of primeval glory: John 17:5; Phil. 2:6, 7; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3. Just what this primeval glory was, we do not know. Jesus is spoken of as being in the bosom of the Father: John 1:18, and of being loved by the Father "before the foundation of the world;" John 17:24. These and other phrases express ineffable relationships within the Godhead which we can not comprehend.

1. Old Testament Appearings.

From Genesis to Malachi, there are frequent instances of christophanies or appearances of Christ to His ancient people. These were two kinds; namely, material symbols, and manifestations in human form. The latter were theophanies or christophanies proper. (Theophany means an appearance of God; Christophany, an appearance of Christ).

(1) Material Symbols.

From the days of the Garden of Eden till the time of the destruction of Solomon's temple, there was a sensible representation of God upon the earth. Our first parents were permitted to come into close contact with Jehovah Himself: Gen. 3:8. In this verse, the word presence is literally "face." Here there was a Divine manifestation to both the eye and the ear. After the fall, God placed at the entrance of Eden cherubim and a flaming sword, visible manifestations of His presence. It was before this presence of God, doubtless, that Cain and Abel brought their offerings, and from it that Cain fled: Gen. 4:4; 5:16. To the patriarchs, the Lord both appeared and spake in a manner sensible to the eye and ear: Gen. 17:1; 18:1; Acts 7:2. Again, to Moses at the burning bush, Jehovah both appeared and spoke: Ex. 3:1-6. Finally, in the pillar of cloud and fire and in the Shekinah glory in tabernacle and temple, Jehovah repeatedly appeared and spake to his servants Moses and Joshua, and made known His will to Israel: Ex. 13:21; 14:15; 19:24; 20:1-26; 40:34-38; I Kings 8:10, 11; II Chron. 5:13, 14. There was no visible manifestation of the presence of Jehovah in the temple of Zerubbabel or in the temple of Herod.

(2) Manifestation in Human Form.

In the Old Testament mention is made of an august, celestial Personage, "who acts in the name of Jehovah," whose name is used interchangeably with that of Jehovah, and who received Divine honor and reverence. The more prominent names given to this heavenly being are: the Angel, the Angel of Jehovah, the Angel of the Presence (or face), and the Angel or Messenger of the Covenant. He can be none other than the Jehovah of the Old Testament, or the Christ of the New Testament—He who became the incarnate Word or Logos: Gen. 16:10-13; 23:20-25; 32:34; 33:21-23; Josh. 5:13-15; Judges 13:3-20; Isa. 63:9; Dan. 10:13; Zech. 1:11, 12; Mal. 3:1.

NOTE—The identity of the material symbols of the pre-existent Christ with His manifestations is clear from such passages as Ex. 3:2 and 14:19. Nor is there any doubt that these symbols and theophanies were manifestations and appearances of the pre-existent Christ. "The glory of the Lord," and the "Word of the Lord" are frequent Old Testament names for the sensible representations of God—the former describing them as they appealed to the eye, and the latter as they appealed to the ear. In the first chapter of John, these same descriptive expressions are applied to Christ: John 1:14. Modern Bible students feel the necessity of proving the deity of Christ. This was not true of John. His contention was that He whom we now know as the second person of the Trinity, Jehovah of Old Testament revelation, became incarnate in Jesus of Nazareth.

2. Prophetic Pictures.

There are three pictures of the pre-existent Christ, so striking and beautiful as to deserve special attention and emphasis:

(1) The Slain Lamb.

This is a picture of the passover Lamb: Ex. 12. John the Baptist identified Christ as the sacrificial Lamb: John 1:29; I Cor. 5:7. John the seer on Patmos had a vision of our Lord as the bleeding Lamb: Rev. 12:11, slain from the foundation of the world: Rev. 3:8.

(2) The Obedient Servant.

This is the picture of Christ portrayed in Psalm 40:6-8. See Heb. 10:5-10. Undoubtedly the primary reference of these passages is to Ex. 21:2-6, where we read of the Hebrew bond-slave, who, unwilling to claim rightful liberty because of his love for his master, wife, and children, submitted to have his ear bored with an awl as the seal of voluntary and perpetual service. In Psa. 40:6, the word "opened" means digged or bored,—a reference to Ex. 21:6. This picture of our Lord is fulfilled in the Gospel of Mark which represents Him as the Servant of Jehovah.

(3) The Beloved Son.

This is the picture presented in II Sam. 7:14-16; Psa. 2:7; 89:26-29. At the baptism of Jesus, the Father identifies Him as the well-beloved Son: Matt. 3:17; Mark 1:11; Luke 3:22. This was repeated at the transfiguration: Matt. 17:5; Mark 9:7; Luke 9:35. See also Isa. 42:1; Eph. 1:6.

IV The Incarnation of Christ.—Incarnation is derived from the Latin word meaning, literally, enfleshment; i.e., the assumption of humanity. Scripture teaches, both by prophetic utterance and historic statement, that Jehovah of the Old Testament became incarnate in Jesus, who was the Christ, the Messiah of God: Gen. 3:15; Deut. 18:18; Isa. 9:6; Matt. 1:18-25; Luke 1:26-35; John 1:14; Acts 10:38; Rom. 8:3, 4; I Tim. 3:16; Heb. 2:14. It also teaches that the purpose of the incarnation was redemption: Gen. 3:15; Isa. 53:4; Matt. 1:21; 20:28; Luke 1:68-75; John 3:16, 17; Gal. 4:4, 5; I Tim. 1:15; I John 3:8; 4:10.

NOTE—There are those who assert that, if our first parents had not sinned, Jesus Christ would have been born into the world just the same. This may be true, but we know no Scripture that proves it. On the contrary, the above and many similar passages unmistakably teach that the incarnation was in order to the atonement.

1. The Two Natures of Jesus Christ.

(1) The Humanity of Christ.

A. Its reality,—as shown by the following:

- a. He expressly called himself and was called "man:" John 8:40; Acts 2:22; Rom. 5:15; I Cor. 15:21; I Tim. 2:5.
- b. He possessed the essential elements of human nature, body, soul, and spirit: Matt. 26:12, 26; 26:38; Luke 23:46.
- c. He was moved by the instinctive principles, and He exercised the active powers, which belong to a normal and developed humanity (hunger, weariness, sleep, love, compassion, anger, fear, groaning, weeping, and prayer): Matt. 4:2; John 19:28; John 4:6; Matt. 8:24; Heb. 5:7; John 12:27; Mark 10:21; Matt. 9:36; Mark 3:5; John 11:33, 35; Matt. 14:23.
- d. He was subject to the ordinary laws of human development, both in body and in soul (grew and waxed strong in spirit): asked questions; grew in wisdom and stature; learned obedience; suffered, being tempted; was made perfect through sufferings: Luke 2:40, 46-49, 52; Heb. 2:10, 18; 5:8.
- e. He suffered and died (bloody sweat; gave up his spirit; his side pierced, and straightway there came out blood and water): Luke 23:44; John 19:30-34.

B. Its integrity.—By this we mean that it was both complete and perfect.

- a. It was of miraculous conception. We must not lose sight of the fact that there was essentially something supernatural surrounding the birth of Christ: Matt. 1:18; Luke 1:35. "On this wise," indicates that this birth was different from those recorded before it. Luke 1:35 is explicit about this matter. To assail the virgin birth is to assail the virgin's life. He was of "the seed of the woman," not of the man. (See Luke 1:34—"how shall this be, seeing I know not a man?") No laws of heredity are sufficient to account for his generation. By creative act, God broke through the chain of human generation and brought into the world a supernatural being. The narrative of the virgin birth need not stagger us. The abundance of historical evidence in its favor should lead to its acceptance. All of the manuscripts in all of the ancient versions contain the record of it. All the traditions of the early church recognized it. Mention of it is made in the earliest of all the creeds—the Apostles' creed. If the doctrine of the virgin birth is rejected, it must be on purely subjective grounds. If one denies the possibility of the supernatural in the experience of human life, it is, of course, easy for him to deny this doctrine. To one who believes that Jesus was human only, it would seem comparatively easy to deny the supernatural birth on a purely theoretical basis. The preconceptions of thinkers, to a great degree, determine their views. It would seem that such a wonderful life as that lived by Christ, having as it did such a wonderful finish in the resurrection and ascension, might, indeed should, have a wonderful and extraordinary entrance into the world. The fact that the virgin birth is attested by the Scriptures, by tradition, by creeds, and that it is in perfect harmony with all the other facts of that wonderful life should be sufficient attestation of the truth.

It has been thought strange that if, as it is claimed, the virgin birth is so essential to the right understanding of the Christian religion that Mark, John, and Paul, should say nothing about it. But does such silence really exist? John says: "the Word became flesh;" while Paul speaks of "God manifested in the flesh." Says F. L. Anderson, "This argument from silence is sufficiently met by the considerations that Mark passes over thirty years of our Lord's life in silence; that John presupposes the narratives of Matthew and Luke; that Paul does not deal with the story of Jesus' life. The facts were known at first only to Mary and Joseph: their very nature involved reticence until Jesus was demonstrated to be the "Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead;" meantime, the natural development of Jesus and his refusal to set up an earthly kingdom have made the miraculous events of thirty years ago seem to Mary like a wonderful dream; so only gradually the marvelous tale of the mother of the Lord found its way into the Gospel tradition and the creeds of the church, and into the innermost parts of the Christians of all countries.

NOTE—I. M. Haldeman makes the inquiry, "Does it make any difference who was the father of Jesus?" There are those who say it does not. He replies, "I affirm it does; I affirm it makes a difference as wide as eternity.

"If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a human father, as Joseph protested he was not that father, Jesus was born of a mother stained with the sin of unchastity.

"If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father, and that father was not Joseph; as Mary was betrothed to him, and in the eye of the law as solemnly bound as a married woman, in giving birth to Jesus she became as guilty as a wife who breaks her marriage vow.

"If Jesus were begotten by a natural father; as that father was not Joseph; as that natural father has never been known, Jesus was begotten by an unknown father of an unmarried woman; as the child of an unmarried woman and unknown father is both illegitimate and bastard, He whom we call the Son of God entered into the world with the barsinister of His mother's unchastity and faithlessness, stamped with the seal of an unknown father's cowardice, and stands before men as an illegitimate and bastard son, having no legal or decent right to live.

"If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father; as personality comes not from the mother, but from the father (Heb. 7:9, 10), He was the seed of the man and not the seed of the woman. If he were not the seed of the woman, the promise made at Eden's gate, that such a seed should bruise the serpent's head, has never been fulfilled; and whatever else Jesus of Nazareth may be, He is not that seed.

"If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father; if, as is true, personality comes from the father, the personality of Jesus was natural. If He were a natural person, He was not God. If He were not God, and since forgiveness of sin belongs only to God, He had no right to forgive sin. He had no right to make Himself the object of faith and the issue of salvation. As He claimed the right to forgive sin and to consign to eternal wrath all who did not believe in Him, He was either a wanton deceiver or a blindly deceived man. In either case, as mental weakening or moral degenerate, He would stand outside the category of a Redeemer and Saviour of men.

"If our Lord Jesus Christ were not begotten by God the Father of the very seed of the woman; if the act of God were not an absolute generative act; if the generative act were that of a natural man and the conception wholly natural, our Lord Jesus Christ is reduced to the level of a merely natural man. If He were a natural man; if He were not true and real God; if He were not God of God, very God of very God, God the Son as well as Son of God, He was not the second person of the Trinity. If He were not the second person of the Trinity the question may be asked:

"Who is the second person of the Trinity?

"To this, under the circumstances, there can be only one answer:

"No one is.

"There is no second person of the Trinity.

"If there be no second person of the Trinity—there is no Trinity.

"Thus, if Jesus of Nazareth had only a natural father, the doctrine of a Triune God, the doctrine that God subsists as three distinct persons in one undivided substance or being, falls to the ground, and the Church is landed into the front yard of open Unitarianism.

"If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural father; if as the son of such a father His personality was only natural; as a natural person is not infinite; as only an infinite person can atone to an infinite person; as only God can satisfy the law, the government and being of God; and since our Lord (as begotten by a natural father) could not be God, and was no more at any time than a finite person, He could not offer atonement to God. If, therefore, the father of Jesus were a natural man, the death of our Lord on the cross was not an atoning sacrifice.

"This is true upon the side of His personality.

"It is true upon the side of His humanity.

"It is true in this wise:

"To be an acceptable victim for sacrifice, to fill the function of a substitute our Lord Jesus Christ must be free from the penalty of sin. To be free from the penalty of sin He must be sinless, not only in deed, but in essence and nature. A sinless humanity can be produced only from a sinless father; but, if our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a natural man, He was begotten by a sinful father. If He were begotten by a sinful father, He inherited his sinful nature. He would have sin in Him. He would be under the penalty of sin. Under the penalty of sin, He could neither be a substitute for sinners, more yet a sacrifice for sin.

"If it could be proven that Jesus had a natural father (and as the son of such a father could die neither as a substitute nor sacrifice) it would be plainly proven that the cross was a bloody, brutal, barbarous, useless and excuseless murder without the basis of a single principle, without profit to man, and without glory to God.

"If our Lord Jesus Christ were begotten by a human father; if as a natural son, with a natural personality and a nature of sin, He could not offer an atoning sacrifice, nor act as a substitute, it would be evident, since God alone can raise the dead, in failing to be true and actual God, He could not fulfill His own promise that after laying down His life He would take it up again; it would be evident He could not of Himself raise Himself from the dead. And, further, as God, the Father, is said to have raised Him, and it is said He should raise Himself; and the Father and the Spirit are represented as co-operating with the personal power of the Son to raise Himself, since He was a natural man and not God He could not co-operate with the Father and the Spirit in a supernatural act; and as His failure to so co-operate would break down the Scripture Doctrine of the invariable co-ordination of the Trinity—resurrection could not take place—He never was raised from the dead.

"If Jesus our Lord had only a natural father, the Trinity as already shown, does not exist. All, therefore, that is predicated of the Trinity as such utterly fails, and there is no honest evidential warrant for believing in the ordained, consummative work of the Trinity; that is to say, the resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth as the thus declared Son of God.

"If Jesus had only a natural father, the logical consequence of His natural sonship vitiates any pretended evidence that He is alive to-day. Immortality has not been brought to light, and we stand on the edge of the grave with only night and silence.

"It makes a great difference who was the father of Jesus.

"If God, the Father, did not stoop down from heaven, and in prime accord with the Son as His verbal and eternal expression, and through the co-ordinate and covenant operation of the Holy Spirit take hold on a cell or seed of the Virgin Mary, creating a new and distinct human nature which the Son of God took into union with Himself, becoming a unique being with two natures, human and Divine in one body, and with one personality forever, then the whole foundation and fabric of Christianity as set forth in the New Testament is completely overthrown.

"The men who deny the virgin birth; who do so that they may the more easily be delivered from carrying the baggage of the miraculous; who shift the fatherhood of Jesus from the eternal God to the act of some unknown and sinful man, are paying a dear price for their jaunty endeavor to accommodate the supernaturalism of Christianity to the poverty-smitten weakness of their own faith, and the noisy clamor of an unbelieving, spiritually ignorant, and scoffing world."

- b. Free, both from hereditary depravity, and from actual sin; as is shown by His never offering sacrifice, never praying for forgiveness, teaching that all but He needed the new birth, challenging all to convict Him of a single sin.

NOTE—Jesus frequently went up to the temple, but He never offered sacrifice. He prayed, "Father, forgive them" (Luke 23:34); but he never prayed: "Father, forgive me." He said, "Ye must be born anew" (John 3:7) but the words indicated that He had no such need. At no one moment in all that life could a single detail have been altered, except for the worse. He not only yielded to God's will when made known to him, but He sought it. (John 5:30). See also with reference to His sinlessness: II Cor. 5:21; Heb. 4:15; I Pet. 1:19; I John 3:5, 7.

- c. Ideal Human Nature,—Furnishing the moral pattern which man is progressively to realize, although within limitations of knowledge and of activity required by His vocation as the world's Redeemer: Psa. 8:4-8; Heb. 2:6-10; I Cor. 15:45; II Cor. 3:18; Phil. 3:21; Col. 1:18; I John 3:2.
- d. A human nature that found its personality only in union with the Divine nature,—in other words, a human nature impersonal in the sense that it had no personality separate from the Divine nature, and prior to its union therewith.

NOTE—By the impersonality of Christ's human nature, we mean only that it had no personality before Christ took it, no personality before its union with the Divine. It was a human nature whose consciousness and will were developed only in union with the personality of the Logos.

- e. A human nature germinal and capable of self-communication,—so constituting Him the spiritual head, and beginning of a new race, the second Adam, from whom fallen man individually and collectively derives new and holy life: Isa. 53:6; Rev. 22:16; John 5:21; John 15:1; John 17:2; I Cor. 15:45; Eph. 5:23, 30.

NOTE—The passages here alluded to abundantly confute the Docetic denial of Christ's veritable human body, and the Appolynarian denial of Christ's veritable human soul. More than this, they established the reality and integrity of Christ's human nature, as possessed of all the elements, faculties, and powers essential to humanity.

(2) The Deity of Christ.

A. Jesus Christ is Recognized as God.

- a. He is expressly called God. In John 1:1, the predicate precedes the verb by way of emphasis, to indicate progress in thought, the Logos was not only with God, but was God. The Word is distinguishable from God, yet the Word was God, of Divine nature; not a God, which to a Jewish ear would have been abominable, nor yet identical with all that can be called God, for then the article would have been inserted.

In John 1:18,—“the only begotten God”—must be regarded as the correct reading, and as a plain ascription of absolute deity to Christ. He is not simply the only revealer of God, but He is Himself God revealed.

In John 20:28, the address of Thomas,—“My Lord and my God”—since it was unrebuked by Christ, is equivalent to an assertion on his own part of His claim to deity.

Titus 2:13, is to be regarded as a direct, definite, and even studied declaration of Christ's deity,—“the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ.”

In Hebrews 1:8, a quotation is used as addressed to Christ, and verse 10 which follows,—“Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth,”—by applying to Christ an Old Testament ascription of Jehovah, implies His absolute Godhead.

- b. Old Testament descriptions of God are applied to Him. This application to Christ of titles and names exclusively appropriated to God is inexplicable, if Christ was not regarded as being Himself God. The peculiar awe with which the term “Jehovah” was set apart by a nation of strict Monotheists as the sacred and incommunicable name of the one self-existent and covenant-keeping God forbids the belief that the Scripture writers could have used it as the designation of a subordinate and created being. Matt. 3:3 compared with Isa. 40:3; John 12:41 compared with Isa. 6:1; Eph. 4:7, 8 compared with Psa. 68:18; I Pet. 3:15 compared with Isa. 8:13.

- c. He possesses the attributes of God. Among these are life, self-existence, immutability, truth, love, holiness, eternity, omnipresence, omniscience, omnipotence. All these attributes are ascribed to Christ in connections which show that the terms are used in no secondary sense, nor in any sense predicable of a creature. John 1:4; 14:6; 5:26; Heb. 7:16; 13:8; Rev. 3:7; I John 3:16; Luke 1:35; John 6:69; Heb. 7:26; John 1:1; Proverbs 8:23; John 17:5; John 8:58; Col. 1:17; Heb. 1:11; Matt. 28:20; Eph. 1:23; Matt. 9:4; John 2:24, 25; 16:30; Acts 1:24; Col. 2:3; Matt. 27:18; Rev. 1:8.
- d. The works of God are ascribed to Him. We do not here speak of miracles, which may be wrought by communicated power, but of such works as the creation of the world, the upholding of all things, the final raising of the dead, and the judging of all men. Power to perform these works can not be delegated, for they are characteristic of omnipotence. John 1:3; I Cor. 8:6; Col. 1:16; Heb. 1:10; Rev. 3:14; Col. 1:17; Heb. 1:3; John 5:27-29; Matt. 25:31, 32.
- e. He receives honor and worship due only to God. In addition to the address of Thomas in John 20:28, which we have already cited among the proofs that Jesus is expressly called God, and in which divine honor is paid to him, we may refer to the prayer and worship offered by the apostolic and post-apostolic church. John 5:23; 14:14; Acts 7:59; Rom. 10:9, 13 with Gen. 4:26; I Cor. 11:24, 25; Heb. 1:6; Phil. 2:10, 11; Rev. 5:12-14; II Tim. 4:18; Heb. 13:21.
- f. His name is associated with that of God upon a footing of equality. We refer to the baptism formula (Matt. 28:19) to the apostolic benediction, (II Cor. 13:14), and to those passages in which eternal life is said to be dependent equally upon Christ and upon God, or in which spiritual gifts are attributed to Christ equally with the Father. John 5:23; 14:1; 17:3; Matt. 11:27; I Cor. 12:4-6; Rom. 10:17; II Thess. 2:16, 17; Col. 3:1; Rev. 20:6; 22:3.
- g. Equality with God is expressly claimed. Equality with God is not only claimed for himself by Jesus, but it is claimed for Him by His apostles. John 5:18; Phil. 2:6.

- h. Further proof of Christ's deity may be found in the application to Him of the phrases: "Son of God," "Image of God;" in the declarations of His oneness with God; in the attribution to Him of the fullness of the Godhead. Matt. 26:63, 64; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3; John 10:30; 14:9; 17:11, 22.
- i. These proofs of Christ's deity from the New Testament are corroborated by Christian experience.

NOTE—Christian experience recognizes Christ as an absolutely perfect Saviour, perfectly revealing the Godhead and worthy of unlimited worship and adoration; that is, it practically recognizes Him as deity. But Christian experience also recognizes that through Christ it has introduction and reconciliation to God as one distinct from Jesus Christ, as one who was alienated from the soul by its sin, who is now reconciled through Jesus' death. In other words, while recognizing Jesus as God, we are also compelled to recognize a distinction between the Father and the Son through whom we come to the Father.

2. The Union of the Two Natures in One Person.

Distinctly as the Scriptures represent Jesus Christ to have been possessed of a Divine nature and of a human nature, each unaltered in essence and undivested of its normal attributes and powers, they with equal distinctness represent Jesus Christ as a single undivided personality in whom these two natures are vitally and inseparably united, so that He is properly, not God and man, but the God-man. The two natures are bound together, not by the moral tie of friendship, nor by the spiritual tie which links the believer to his Lord, but by a bond unique and inscrutable, which constitutes them one person with a single consciousness and will,—this consciousness and will including within their possible range both the human nature and the Divine.

(1) Proof of this Union.

- A. Christ uniformly speaks of himself, and is spoken of, as a single person. There is no interchange of "I" and "thou" between the human and the Divine natures, such as we find between the persons of the Trinity (John 17:23). Christ never uses the plural number in referring to Himself unless it be in John 3:11—"We speak that we do know"—and even here "we" is more probably used as inclusive of the disciples. I John 4:2—"Is come in the flesh"—is supplemented by John 1:14,—"became flesh;" and these texts together assure us that Christ so came in human nature as to make that nature an element in His single personality. John 17:23; 3:11; I John 2; John 1:14.
- B. The attributes and powers of both natures are ascribed to the one Christ, and conversely the works and dignities in a way which can not be understood, except upon the principle that these two natures are organically and indissolubly united in a single person. (Examples of the former usage are Rom. 1:3 and I Pet. 3:18; of the latter, I Tim. 2:5 and Heb. 1:2, 3). Hence we can say, on the one hand, that the God-man existed before Abraham, yet was born in the reign of Augustus Caesar; and that Jesus Christ wept, was weary, suffered, died, yet is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; on the other hand, that a Divine Saviour redeemed us upon the cross, and that the human Christ is present with His people even to the end of the age. (Eph. 1:23; 4:10; Matt. 28:20).

- C. The constant scriptural representations of the infinite value of Christ's atonement and of the union of that part of the human race with God which has been secured in Him, are intelligible only when Christ is regarded, not as a man of God, but as the God-man in whom the two natures are so united that what each does has the value of both. I John 2:2; Eph. 2:16, 18, 21, 22; II Pet. 1:4.
- D. It corroborates this view to remember that the universal Christian consciousness recognizes in Christ a single and undivided personality, and expresses this recognition in its services of song and prayer.

(2) The Real Nature of this Union.

a. Its great Importance.

While the Scriptures represent the person of Christ as the crowning mystery of the Christian scheme (Matt. 11:27; Col. 1:27; 2:2; I Tim. 3:16), they also incite us to its study (John 17:3; 20:27; Luke 24:39; Phil. 3:8, 10). This is the more needful, since Christ is not only the central point of Christianity, but is Christianity itself—the embodied reconciliation and union between man and God. The following remarks are offered, not as fully explaining, but only as in some respects relieving the difficulties of the subject.

B. The Chief Problems.

These problems are the following:

- a. One personality and two natures. We may throw light on this by the figure of two concentric circles.
- b. Human nature without personality. This is illustrated by remembering that two earthly parents unite in producing a single child.
- c. The relation of the Logos to the humanity during the earthly life of Christ. We can somewhat understand this by the illustration of latent memory, which contains so much more than present recollection.

- d. The relation of the humanity to the Logos during the heavenly life of Christ. We are helped here by the thought that body is the manifestation of spirit, and that Christ in His heavenly state is not confined to place.

C. Reason for Mystery.

The union of the two natures in Christ's person is necessarily inscrutable, because there are no analogies to it in our own experiences. Attempts to illustrate it, on the one hand, from the union and yet the distinctness of soul and body, of iron and heat; and on the other hand, from the union and yet the distinctness of Christ and the believer, of the Divine Son and the Father, are one-sided and become utterly misleading if they are regarded as furnishing a rationale of the union, and not simply a means of repelling objection. The first two illustrations mentioned above lack the essential element of two natures to make them complete: soul and body are not two natures, but one, nor are iron and heat two substances. The last two illustrations mentioned above lack the element of single personality: Christ and the believer are two persons, not one, even as the Son and the Father are not one person but two.

D. Ground of Possibility.

The possibility of Deity and humanity in one person is grounded in the original creation of man in the Divine image. Man's resemblance to God, his possession of a rational and spiritual nature, is the condition of incarnation. Brute-life is incapable of union with God. But human nature is capable of the Divine, in the sense not only that it lives, moves, and has its being in God, but that God may unite Himself indissolubly to it and endue it with Divine powers, while yet it remains all the more truly human. Since the moral image of God in human nature has been lost by sin, Christ, the perfect image of God after which man was originally made, restores that lost image by uniting Himself to humanity and filling it with His Divine life and love.

E. No Double Personality.

This possession of two natures does not involve a double personality in the God-man, for the reason that the Logos takes into union with Himself, not an individual man, with already developed personality, but human nature which has had no separate existence before its union with the Divine.

F. Effect Upon the Human.

The union of the Divine and the human nature makes the latter possessed of the powers belonging to the former; in other words, the attributes of the Divine nature are imparted to the human without passing over into its essence,—so that the human Christ even on earth had power to be, to know, and to do as God. That this power was latent, or was only rarely manifested, was the result of the self-chosen state of humiliation upon which the God-man had entered. In this state of humiliation, the communication of the contents of the Divine nature to the human was mediated by the Holy Spirit. The God-man, in His servant-form, knew and taught, and performed only what the Spirit permitted and directed (Matt. 3:16; John 3:34; Acts 1:2; 10:38; Heb. 9:14). But when thus permitted, He knew, taught, and performed, not, like the prophets, by power communicated from without, but by virtue of His own inner Divine energy (Matt. 17:2; Mark 5:41; Luke 5:20, 21; 6:19; John 2:11, 24, 25; 3:13; 20:19).

G. Effect Upon The Divine.

This communion of the natures was such that, although the Divine nature, in itself is incapable of ignorance, weakness, temptation, suffering, or death, the one person Jesus Christ was capable of these by virtue of the union of the Divine nature with the human nature in Him. As the human Saviour can exercise Divine attributes, not in virtue of his humanity alone, but derivatively by virtue of his possession of a Divine nature, so the Divine Saviour can suffer and be ignorant as man, not in His Divine nature, but derivatively by virtue of His possession of a human nature. We may illustrate this from the connection between body and soul. The soul suffers pain from union with the body, of which apart from the body it would be incapable. So the God-man, although in His Divine nature, insensible to pain and suffering, was capable, through His union with humanity, of absolutely infinite suffering.

H. Necessity of the Union.

The union of two natures in one person is necessary to constitute Jesus Christ a proper mediator between man and God. His two-fold nature gives Him fellowship with both parties, since it involves an equal dignity with God, and at the same time a perfect sympathy with man, (Heb. 2:17, 18; 4:15, 16). This two-fold nature, moreover, enables Him to present to both God and man proper terms of reconciliation: being man, He can make atonement for man; being God, His atonement has infinite value; while both His deity and His humanity combine to move the hearts of offenders and constrain them to submission and love (I Tim. 2:5; Heb. 7:25).

I. The Union Eternal.

The union of humanity with Deity in the person of Christ is indissoluble and eternal. Unlike the Avatars of the East, the incarnation was a permanent assumption of human nature by the second person of the Trinity. In the ascension of Christ, glorified humanity has attained the throne of the universe. By His spirit, this same Divine human-Saviour is omnipresent to secure the progress of His cause. The final subjection of the Son to the Father, alluded to in I Cor. 15:28, can not be other than the complete return of the Son to His original relation to the Father; since, according to John 17:5, Christ is again to possess the glory which He had with the Father before the world was (cf. Heb. 1:8; 7:24, 25).

NOTE—The best illustration of the possible meaning of Christ's giving up the kingdom, is found in the Governor of the East India Company giving up his authority to the queen, and merging it in that of the home government, he himself, however, at the same time becoming secretary of state for India. So Christ will give up His viceroyalty, but not His mediatorship. Christ will finish His work as mediator and then will reign as God, immediately revealing to us the Deity. It is not the giving up of His mediatorial authority,—that throne is to endure forever,—but it is a simple public recognition that God is all in all, that Christ is God's medium of accomplishing all.

3. The Two States of Christ.

(1) The State of Humiliation.

A. The Nature of this Humiliation. We may dismiss, as unworthy of serious notice, the views that it consisted essentially either in the union of the Logos with human nature,—for this union with human nature continues in the state of exaltation; or in the outward trials and privations of Christ's human life,—for this view casts reproach upon poverty, and ignores the power of the soul to rise superior to its outward circumstances. The humiliation as the Scriptures seem to show, consisted wholly:

- a. In that act of the pre-existent Logos by which He gave up His Divine glory with the Father, in order to take a servant-form. In this act, He resigned, not the possession, not yet entirely the use, but rather the independent exercise of the Divine attributes. John 17:5; Phil. 2:6, 7.
- b. In the submission of the Logos to the control of the Holy Spirit and the limitations of His Messianic missions, in His communications of the Divine fullness to the human nature which He had taken into union with Himself. Acts 1:2; 10:38; Heb. 9:14.

- c. In the continuous surrender on the part of the God-man, so far as His human nature was concerned of the exercise of the Divine powers with which it was endowed by virtue of its union with the Divine, and in the voluntary acceptance, which followed upon this, of temptation, suffering, and death. Matt. 26:53; John 10:17, 18; Phil. 2:8.

NOTE—Each of these elements of the doctrine has its own scriptural support. We must therefore regard the humiliation of Christ, not as consisting in a single act, but as involving a continuous self-renunciation, which began with the Kenosis or self-emptying of the Logos in becoming man, and which culminated in the self-subjection of the God-man to the death of the cross. Phil. 2:6-8.

(2) The State of Exaltation.

A. The Nature of this Exaltation. It consisted essentially in:

- a. A resumption, on the part of the Logos of His independent exercise of Divine attributes.
- b. The withdrawal, on the part of the Logos of all limitations in His communication of His Divine fullness to the human nature of Christ.
- c. The corresponding exercise, on the part of the human nature, of those powers which belong to it by virtue of its union with the Divine. Compare Psa. 9:4-8 with Heb. 2:7-10.

B The Saving Work of Christ.

1. The Three-fold Office of Christ.

According to the Scriptures, Jesus Christ has a three-fold office work; viz., a prophetic ministry, a priestly ministry, and a kingly ministry.

(1) Christ as Prophet.

The predictive announcement that Christ should be a prophet is recorded in Deut. 18:18, 19. See also Mt. 13:57; 16:14; 21:11; John 1:21; 4:19; 6:14; 7:40; 9:17, and especially Acts 3:22; 7:37.

Officially, the prophetic ministry of Christ began at the River Jordan, when He was endued with the Holy Spirit, and ended at the cross when He offered Himself as a sacrifice for sin. Mt. 4:23-25; Luke 4:14-27; Acts 2:22-23; Heb. 9:26-28.

The primary idea of the prophetic office is that of one who "brings things to light," or "makes manifest." The secondary is prediction of the future. The Old Testament prophet, then, exercised two functions: first, insight; and second, foresight. The prophet had also, so to speak, "hindsight;" for by revelation of the Spirit He frequently knew things of the past. This was true of Moses when he penned the panorama of creation: Gen. 1 and 2.

NOTE—The original name of the prophet was seer, I Sam. 9:9; II Kings 17:13. A seer is one who sees, i.e., who sees things not beheld by mortal eye. The word prophet comes from the Greek pro, before or forth, and phemi, to speak signifying to speak forth or beforehand. Thus a prophet was one who spoke to the people as the mouthpiece of God; Ex. 4:15, 16. On the primary idea of the prophetic office see Ex. 4:10-17.

A. Manifold Character of Prophetic Ministry.

An Old Testament prophet fulfilled his ministry in three ways: by teaching, by predicting, and by healing. Our Lord did all those; Mt. 5-7; 24; 8-9. More particularly, Christ fulfilled His prophetic office in the following ways:

- a. By His gracious words; Mt. 5:2; 7:28-29; John 6:63; Rev. 1:10, 11.
- b. By His wondrous deeds; John 5:36; 10:25; 15:24; Acts 2:22.
- c. By His matchless example; John 13:15; I Pet. 2:21-23.
- d. By His unparalleled silence; Mt. 27:13, 14; I Pet. 2:23.
- e. By His gift of the Spirit; John 14:26; 15:26; I Pet. 1:10, 11; I John 2:20-27.

(2) Christ as Priest.

The predictive announcement that Christ should be a priest is recorded in Ps. 110:4. See Heb. 5:6; 6:20; 7:21. Our Lord's priesthood is not in the line of Aaron, but "after the order of Melchizedec;" that is, it is not exercised on earth but in heaven; and it is unchanging and eternal.

Officially, or dispensationally, the priestly ministry of Christ began at the cross, when He offered Himself as a sacrifice for sin, and will end at His return, when as king He will sit on the throne of David; Heb. 8-9.

A priest is a mediator—one who intercedes with a just God on behalf of guilty sinners; Lev. 4:16-18.

NOTE—Dr. Wickes: "Soon after the deluge, a class of men was set apart and consecrated to this sacred office of mediatorship with God, which is the essential idea of a priest—one to whom the offering of sacrifices is specially committed, that he may intercede with heaven on behalf of the guilty, who themselves have no access into the Divine presence. Thus, not only must a bloody sacrifice, or sin-offering, be made, but made by certain persons who have been clothed by this special authority to act for others. They are appointed mediators between God and man, through whose intercession, by the offering of blood, atonement is made and justification obtained for the transgressor." In Israel, by the law of Moses, the priesthood was lodged in the house of Aaron.

A. The Three-fold Scope of Priesthood.

The scope of the Old Testament priesthood was three-fold, viz: first, to offer sacrifices before the people; second, to go within the vail to make intercession for the people; and third, to come forth to bless the people; or, Reconciliation, Intercession, and Benediction. As the great high priest, our Lord fulfills these three functions. The first, reconciliation, He accomplished at His first coming, when, on the cross He offered Himself as a sacrifice for sin. The second, intercession, He is accomplishing in Heaven between His first and second advents. And the third, benediction, He will accomplish upon His return; Heb. 9: 27, 28; I Pet. 1:18-20; 2:24; Rom. 8:34; Heb. 7:25; II Thess. 1:10; I Pet. 1:4, 5; Rev. 1:15; 20:4.

NOTE—The priests had access to the Holy Place of the ancient tabernacle; but the high priest alone, and then but once a year, on the great day of atonement, could enter the Holy of Holies; Heb. 9:6, 7. The formula of benediction which the high priest used on emerging from the Holy of Holies, is believed to be recorded in Num. 6:22-27.

(3) Christ as King.

This office is to be distinguished from the sovereignty which Christ originally possessed in virtue of His Divine nature. Christ's kingship is the sovereignty of the Divine Redeemer, which belonged to Him of right from the moment of His birth, but which will be fully exercised only when He comes the second time to sit upon "the throne of His father David." His kingship belongs more properly to Eschatology, and in particular to the study of the Millennium. Accordingly, it will be treated under that heading.

2. The Atoning Death of Christ.

The Scriptures teach that Christ suffered in our stead, to satisfy an immanent demand of the Divine holiness, and thus remove an obstacle in the Divine mind to the pardon and restoration of the guilty. This statement may be expanded and explained in a preliminary way as follows:

The fundamental attribute of God is holiness and holiness is not self-communicating love, but self-affirming righteousness. Holiness limits and conditions love, for love can will happiness only, as happiness results from and consists with holiness, that is, with conformity to God.

The universe is a reflection of God, and Christ the Word, (Logos) is its life. God has constituted the universe and humanity as a part of it, so as to express His holiness, positively by connecting happiness with righteousness, negatively by attaching unhappiness or suffering to sin. Christ is the Logos, the immanent God, God revealed in nature, in humanity, and in redemption. The universe must be recognized as created, upheld, and governed by the same Being, who, in the course of history was manifest in human form and who made atonement for human sin by His death on Calvary. As all God's creative activity has been exercised through Christ, so it is Christ in whom all things consist or are held together. Providence, as well as preservation, is His work. He makes the universe to reflect God, and especially God's ethical or moral nature. That pain or loss universally and inevitably follow sin is the proof that God is unalterably opposed to moral evil; and the demands and reproaches of conscience witness that holiness is the fundamental attribute of God's being.

Christ, the Logos, as the revealer of God in the universe and in humanity, must condemn sin by visiting upon it the suffering which is its penalty; while at the same time, as the Life of humanity (John 1:1-4), He must endure the reaction of God's holiness against sin which constitutes that penalty. Here is a double work of Christ of which Paul distinctly speaks in Romans 8:3, 4. The meaning is that God did through Christ what the law could not do, namely, accomplished deliverance for humanity; and did this by sending His Son in a nature which in us is identified with sin. In connection with sin, and as an offering for sin, God condemned sin by condemning Christ. When the question is asked, "In what sense did God send His Son in connection with sin?" there is only one answer possible. He sent Him to expiate sin by His sacrificial death. This is the center and foundation of Paul's Gospel: Rom. 3:25. But whatever God did in condemning sin, He did through Christ (II Cor. 5:19); Christ was the condemner, as well as the condemned; conscience in us, which unites the accuser and the accused, shows us how Christ could be both the judge and the sin-bearer.

Our personality is not self-contained. We live, move and have our being in Christ, the Logos. Our reason, affection, conscience and will are complete only in Him. He is generic humanity, of which we are the off-shoots (Acts 17:24-28). When His righteousness condemns sin, and His love voluntarily endures the suffering which is sin's penalty, humanity ratifies the judgment of God, makes full propitiation for sin, and satisfies the demand of holiness.

While Christ's love explains His willingness to endure suffering for us, only His holiness furnishes the reason for that constitution of the universe and of human nature which makes this suffering necessary. In regard to us, His sufferings are sacrificial and substitutionary, since His deity and His sinlessness enable Him to do for us what we could never do for ourselves. Yet this substitution is also a sharing—not the work of one external to us but of one who is the life of humanity, the soul of our soul and the life of our life, and so responsible with us for the sins of the race, yet voluntarily, vicariously and graciously so.

The historical work of the incarnate Christ is not itself all that is involved in the atonement—it is rather the revelation of that which projects itself both into the past and into the future, namely, the suffering of God on account of human sin. Yet, without the historical work which was finished on Calvary, the age-long suffering of God could have never been made effectual for man or comprehensible to man.

NOTE—Christ, identified with the human race, as the Logos, the immanent God, has suffered in all human sin; "In all our affliction He has been afflicted" (Isa. 63:9); so that the Psalmist can say: "Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden, even the God who is our salvation" (Ps. 68:19). The historical sacrifice was a burning-glass which focused the diffused rays of the Sun of righteousness and made them effective in the melting of human hearts. The sufferings of Christ take deepest hold upon us only when we see in them the two contrasted but complementary truths: that holiness must make penalty to follow sin, and that love must share that penalty with the transgressor. The Cross was the concrete exhibition of the holiness that required, and of the love that provided man's redemption. Those six hours of pain and suffering on the cross were a revelation of eternal facts in the being of God. The heart of God and the meaning of all previous history were then unveiled. As He who hung upon the cross was God, manifest in the flesh, so the suffering of the cross was God's suffering for sin, manifest in the flesh.

(1) The Fact of the Atoning Death of Christ.

By predictions, types, descriptive terms, and plain statements, the Scriptures clearly set forth the fact of the atonement.

A. Types.

The typology of the Old Testament is full of the atonement. We may instance a few of the more striking types.

- a. Coat of skins. Gen. 3:21.
- b. Abel's lamb. Gen. 4:4.
- c. The offering of Isaac. Gen. 22.
- d. The passover lamb. Ex. 12.
- e. The Levitical sacrificial system. Lev. Chap. 1-7.
- f. The brazen serpent. Numbers 21. See John 3:14; 12:32.
- g. The slain lamb. Isa. 53:6, 7. See John 1:29; Rev. 13:8.

B. Predictions.

The Old Testament abounds in predictions concerning the Messiah, His character and career. Indeed, there are said to be three hundred and thirty-three specific striking Old Testament pictures of the sacrificial death of Christ.

- a. The seed of the woman. Gen. 3:15.
- b. The sin offering. Ps. 22.
- c. The vicarious Saviour. Isa. 53.
- d. The cut-off Messiah. Dan. 9:26.
- e. The smitten Shepherd. Zech. 13: 6, 7.

C. Descriptive Terms.

There are five Scriptural descriptive terms used to describe the sacrificial work of Christ:

- a. The atonement,—the word atonement occurs only once in the authorized version of the New Testament, viz., Rom. 5:11. The Greek noun here is "katallage" which is more correctly rendered in the revised version "reconciliation." The root of the Hebrew word for atonement is "Kaphar," which literally signifies, to cover, i. e., "forgive sin." See Ex. 30:10. Psa. 32:1 gives us both the figurative and spiritual meaning of atonement.

NOTE—The lid of the arc, called the mercy seat, is in Hebrew "the kapporeths," signifying the place of the covering (i.e., of sin).

- b. Reconciliation,—reconciliation is the translation of the Greek noun "Katallage," which literally signifies an exchange, i. e., of equivalent value in money-changing, or an adjustment, i. e., of a difference. The enmity between God and man has been destroyed, and amity has been restored. "The word is used in the New Testament," says Thayer, "of the restoration of the favor of God to sinners that repent and put their trust into the expiatory death of Christ:" Rom. 5:11, R. V.; 11:16; II Cor. 5:18, 19. Reconciliation has two sides: active and passive. In the active sense, we may look upon Christ's death as removing the enmity existing between God and man, and which had hitherto been a barrier to fellowship (Eph. 2:16; Col. 1:20). This state of existing enmity is set forth in such scriptures as Rom. 8:7; Eph. 2:15; James 4:4. In the passive sense of the word, it may indicate the change of attitude on the part of man toward God, this change being wrought in the heart of man by a vision of the cross of Christ; a change from enmity to friendship thus taking place (II Cor. 5:20). It is probably better to state the case thus: God is propitiated, and the sinner is reconciled (II Cor. 5:19, 20).
- c. Propitiation,—propitiation is the translation of the Greek nouns "Hilamos" and "hilasterion," literally signifying an appeasing, a placating, an expiation. Propitiation comes from the Latin and means that which renders one propitious or favorably disposed towards another. Thus, the death of Christ is the ground whereby God is rendered propitious or favorably disposed towards the sinner. Christ, in other words, is the propitiation for sin: Rom. 3:25; I John 2:2; 4:10. See Heb. 2:17, R. V., also Gen. 32:20 as an illustration.
- d. Redemption and Ransom,—redemption is the translation of the Greek nouns "lutrosis" and "apolutrosis," signifying a releasing or liberation from captivity, slavery, or death by the payment of a price, called a ransom. Redemption is from the Latin and signifies a buying back: Luke 1:63; 2:38; Rom. 3:24; I Cor. 1:30; Eph. 1:7, 14; 4:30; Col. 1:14; Heb. 9:12, 15. Thus,

Christ is the ransom, who delivers us from sin and death: Matt. 20:28; I Pet. 1:18; I Tim. 2:6; Gal. 3:13. The meaning of a ransom is clearly set forth in Leviticus 25:47-49. It is the price paid to buy back a person or thing for which it is held in captivity. So sin is like a slave market in which sinners are "sold under sin" (Rom. 7:14); souls are under sentence of death (Ezek. 18:4). Christ, by his death, buys sinners out of the market, thereby indicating complete deliverance from the service of sin. He looses the bonds, sets the prisoners free, by paying a price—that price being His own precious blood.

- e. Substitution,—substitution is not a Biblical word, but it is a scriptural idea. It means that one person or thing is put in, or takes the place of another person or thing. Thus, Christ took the place of sinners and died, thus suffering the penalty of sin, which they deserved. This is the significance of the scape-goat; Lev. 16. This is also the meaning of Isa. 53:6. And it is the clear teaching of the New Testament: Matt. 20:28; Mark 10:45; II Cor. 5:21; Gal. 2:20; I Pet. 3:18.

NOTE—There are two Greek prepositions which express the substitutional or vicarious idea, viz: "hyper"—in behalf of, and "anti"—instead of. The English preposition "for" is ambiguous. It means both in behalf of and instead of. The idea of substitution is well illustrated by the use of the preposition used in connection with this phase of Christ's death. In Matt. 20:28, Christ is said to give His life a ransom for many, (also I Tim. 2:6). That this preposition means "instead of" is clear from its use in Matt. 2:22—"Archelaus did reign in the room (in the stead) of his father, Herod." Also in Luke 11:11—"Will he for (instead of) a fish give him a serpent?" (See Hebrews 12:2, 16). Substitution, then, as used here means this: That something happened to Christ and because it happened to Christ, it need not happen to us. Christ died for our sins; we need not die for them if we accept His sacrifice. For further illustrations, see Gen. 22:13; God providing a ram instead of Isaac; also Barabbas freed and Christ bearing His cross and taking His place.

D. Explicit Statements.

The New Testament abounds in explicit statements concerning the atonement. If it be carefully read and all the passages bearing on this subject marked, and these classified, something like the following will be the result:

1. The center and heart of the atonement of Christ is declared to be:
 - a. His death; Rom. 5:10; Phil. 2:8; Heb. 2:9-14; 9-16; Rev. 5:6, 9, 12.
 - b. His cross; I Cor. 1:23; Gal. 3:1; 6:12; Eph. 2:16; Col. 1:20.
 - c. His blood; Matt. 26:28; Mark 14:24; Luke 22:20; Eph. 1:7; 2:13; Col. 1:14; I John 1:7; Heb. 9:12, 15; Rev. 1:5; 5:9.

2. The atonement bears a relation to God:
 - a. It is grounded in His love; John 3:16.
 - b. It manifests His righteousness; Rom. 3:25; II Cor. 5:21.
 - c. It measures the extent of His sacrifice; John 3:16; Rom. 8:32; II Cor. 5:21; I John 4:10.
 - d. It is the basis of our reconciliation; Rom. 5:11; II Cor. 5:18, 19.
3. The atonement bears a relation to the law.
 - a. Christ was born under the law; Gal. 4:4, 5.
 - b. Christ bore its curse; Gal. 3:13; Phil. 2:8.
 - c. Christ fulfilled its righteousness; Rom. 5:18, 19; 8:3, 4; 10:4.
4. The sacrifice of Christ was necessary: Luke 24:26; Gal. 2:21; 3:21; Heb. 2:10.
5. The sacrifice of Christ was voluntary: John 10:17, 18; Gal. 2:20; Eph. 5:2; Heb. 9:14; 10:7-9.
6. The atonement of Christ was the only sacrifice for sin: Acts 4:12; Rom. 3:20-28; Heb. 1:3, 9:22; 10:10, 12, 14, 26; I Peter 3:18.
7. The atonement of Christ was vicarious: Matt. 26:28; Rom. 5:6; II Cor. 5:14, 15; Gal. 3:13, 14.
8. The atonement of Christ was for sin: John 1:29; Rom. 3:25; 5:8; 6:10; 8:3; I Cor. 15:3; II Cor. 5:21; Gal. 3:13; Heb. 9:28; I Peter 2:24; 3:18; Rev. 1:5.
9. The atonement of Christ was for various classes:
 - a. For His own people; Matt. 1:21; John 10:11; 51:13; Eph. 5:25; Heb. 2:13, 14; I John 3:16.
 - b. For the many; Matt. 20:28; Mark 10:45; Heb. 9:28.
 - c. For the lost; Matt. 18:11; Mark 2:17; Luke 5:32; 19:10.
 - d. For the whole world; John 1:29; 3:16; 6:51; 12:47; II Cor. 5:14, 15; I Tim. 2:6; Heb. 2:9; 1 John 2:2.
10. The atonement of Christ produces many beneficial effects:
 - a. Thereby Jesus becomes the Saviour of men; Matt. 1:21.
 - b. Thereby justification is received; Acts 13:39.

- c. Thereby cleansing is received; I John 1:7.
- d. Thereby sanctification is received; Heb. 13:12.
- e. Thereby healing is received; I Peter 2:24.
- f. Thereby universal blessings are received; John 14:13; Eph. 1:3; Heb. 9:15.

(2) The Necessity of the Atoning Death of Christ.

So far as we can penetrate into the mystery of the atonement, its necessity was four-fold:

A. The Holiness of God.

The holiness of God was outraged by sin and demanded appeasement by punishment.

B. The Law of God.

The law of God was violated by sin and demanded that the penalty of death be inflicted.

Law has been called "the expression of will." While all law is of God, we may distinguish between Natural and Divine law.

NATURAL LAW underlies the physical constitution of the universe. It has been defined as the observed uniform action or tendency of the forces or powers of the physical universe, as gravitation, cohesion, chemical affinity, etc. Natural law implies four things: (a) a lawgiver or authoritative will; (b) persons and things whereon the law operates; (c) a command or expression of this will; and (d) a power enforcing the command. On the other hand, DIVINE LAW underlies the moral constitution of the universe. It is two-fold, viz: the moral law and the ceremonial law. The Moral Law is a transcript of the character of God, that is, it is His essential nature expressed in perceptive form, as the Decalogue, the ethical teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, and the new commandment of Jesus; John 15:12. The moral law, therefore, is elemental, universal, and permanent. It implies six things: (a) A divine lawgiver or ordaining will; (b) subjects, or moral beings upon whom the law terminates; (c) commands, or the expression of this will in the moral constitution of the subjects and in the form of written perceptive enactments; (d) power enforcing these commands; (e) duty, or obligation to obey; and (f) sanctions, or pains and penalties for disobedience. Now, it is the moral law which the sinner has transgressed and for which transgression the penalty of death is threatened; Ezk. 18:4; Rom. 6:23.

The CEREMONIAL LAW is the expression in written perceptive form of the will of God for a specific purpose, as the Levitical system of ablutions and the distinction between clean and unclean animals: Lev. chaps. 11-15. The ceremonial law, accordingly, was local in application and temporary in character. Indeed, in Christ and His Gospel, the moral law is fulfilled but the ceremonial law is abrogated: Rom. 10:4; Acts 10:9-16; I Tim. 4:1-5.

C. The Guilty Conscience.

The guilty and defiled conscience of the sinner can be acquitted and cleansed only through punishment—the punishment of the sinner himself or of his Substitute, the Saviour. Peace and rest cannot come to the condemned heart till it is assured that its just penalty has been borne by the spotless Lamb of God: Heb. 10:1-8.

D. The Lost Sinner.

In the doctrine of Hamartiology, or doctrine of Sin, it is shown that in consequence of sin man is both helpless and hopeless. HE IS LOST, “having no hope, and without God in the world:” Eph. 2:12. For this reason “the Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost;” Luke 19:10.

NOTE—Heathen sacrifices bear witness to the necessity of atonement for sin. They are best explained as a perversion of an original Divine revelation. This perversion is seen in the fact that while in heathen sacrifices the victim is offered to appease an offended deity, the truth as set forth in the Scriptures is that “God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself:” II Cor. 5:19. That heathen sacrifices are a perversion of an original Divine revelation is further seen in the fact that the idea of substitution is uppermost; that is, the worshiper, conscious of his sinfulness, brings his offering by whose innocent blood he believes his guilt is expiated.

(3) The Extent of the Atoning Death of Christ.

As to the extent of the atonement, a distinction must be made between its sufficiency and its efficiency. In its sufficiency, the atonement of Christ is universal; that is, potential provision is made for all mankind. But in its efficiency the atonement is limited; that is, actual provision is made only for those who accept God’s gracious offer of salvation through Christ. Both aspects are presented in I Tim. 4:10: “We trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe.”

1. Passages bearing on the universality of the atonement: Heb. 2:9; I Tim. 2:6; 4:10; Titus 2:11; I John 2:2; II Peter 3:9.
2. Passages bearing on the limitation of the atonement: Eph. 1:4, 7; II Tim. 1:9, 10. See John 17:9, 20, 24.

NOTE—Christ is the Saviour of all men in the sense that: (1) His atonement acts as a stay in the execution of the sentence against sin, securing for all men ■ space for repentance, and the enjoyment of the common blessings of life, forfeited by transgression: II Peter 3:9; Matt. 5:45; Acts 14:17; (2) His atonement has made objective provision for the salvation of all, by removing from the Divine mind every obstacle to the pardon and restoration of sinners, except their wilful opposition to God and refusal to turn to Him: Rom. 5:8-10; II Cor. 5:18-20; (3) His atonement has procured for all men the powerful incentives to repentance presented in the cross, together with the combined agency of the Christian church and the Holy Spirit: Rom. 2:4; John 16:3; II Cor. 5:18-20; (4) His atonement provides for the removal of the curse from nature: Isa. 55:13; Rom. 8:21, 22; and (5) His atonement provides for the salvation of infants: Matt. 18:10; 19:13-15. On the other hand, Christ is the Saviour only of those who believe, because repentance and faith are the conditions of salvation: Acts 2:38.

- (4) The Philosophy of the Atonement seeks its rational explanation. It must be frankly admitted that a complete and satisfactory philosophy of the atonement is impossible, for at bottom it is a profound and impenetrable mystery. Indeed, the early church viewed the atonement as a fact more than as a doctrine; that is, as a historic event, not as a speculative problem. It was the central truth of the gospel. Forgiveness was offered freely through the blood of Christ on the simple condition of repentance from sin and faith towards God. It would have been well if this had continued to be the case. But with the scholasticism of the Middle Ages, the speculative element entered into the view of the atonement. It has been estimated that fully fifteen theories, so called, of the atonement have been formulated. Of these, six merit our attention: five, which we believe to be untrue to the Scriptures: and the last one, which we believe to be the true Biblical view.

A. The Socinian, or Example Theory of the Atonement.

a. Statement.

"This theory held that subjective sinfulness is the sole barrier between man and God. Not God, but only man, needs to be reconciled. This can be effected by man's own will, through repentance and reformation. The death of Christ is but the death of a noble martyr. He redeems us, only as His human example of faithfulness to duty has a powerful influence upon our moral improvement. This fact the apostles, either consciously or unconsciously, clothed in the language of the Greek and Jewish sacrifices" (Strong).

NOTE—This theory was fully elaborated by Laellus Socinus and Faustus Socinus, of Poland, in the 16th century. Its modern representatives are Unitarians.

b. Objections.

- (a) Philosophically, it is based upon false principles; for example, that will is simply the volitional faculty; that utility is the basis of virtue; that law is the expression of arbitrary will; that penalty is a means of reforming the offender; and that righteousness, in either God or man, is only the manifestation of benevolence.
- (b) Historically, it is the outgrowth of the Pelagian view of sin, and "logically necessitates a curtailment or surrender of every other characteristic doctrine of Christianity—inspiration, sin, the deity of Christ, justification, regeneration, and eternal retribution" (Strong).

NOTE—Pelagianism was the denial of total depravity in man and the affirmation of "ability"—that is, that man by his own efforts, with Divine help, is capable of salvation. The Socinian theory requires the abandonment of the doctrine of inspiration because throughout the Scriptures a vicarious and expiatory sacrifice is presented; the doctrine of sin, because sin as objective guilt and subjective defilement is denied; the doctrine of Christ's deity, because if man can save himself, he has no need of an infinite sacrifice by an infinite Saviour; the doctrine of justification, because it denies our being declared guiltless before the law on account of anything Christ has done; the doctrine of regeneration, because it denies the necessity of the birth from above; and the doctrine of eternal retribution, because "this is no longer appropriate to finite transgression of arbitrary law, and to superficial sinning that does not involve nature" (Strong).

- (c) Scripturally, it contradicts the fact that sin involves objective guilt as well as subjective defilement; that God's holiness requires Him to punish sin; that the atonement was vicarious and substitutional; and that such vicarious and substitutional bearing of sin was necessary in order to furnish a ground whereby God might show favor to the guilty.
- d. Again, "it furnishes no proper explanation of the sufferings and death of Christ. The unmartyrlike anguish cannot be accounted for, and the forsaking by the Father cannot be justified upon the hypothesis that Christ died as a mere witness to truth. See Psa. 22. If Christ's sufferings were not propitiatory, they neither furnish us with a perfect example, nor constitute a manifestation of the love of God" (Strong).
- e. Once more, it makes the chief result of Christ's death what at most can only be a subordinate result: for neither Scripture nor Christian experience finds in Christ's example the principal motive of His death. "Mere example is but a new preaching of the law, which repels and condemns. The cross has power to lead men to holiness, only as it first shows a satisfaction made for sins. Accordingly, most of the passages which represent Christ as an example also contain references to His propitiatory work" (Strong). See also I Peter 2:21.

- f. Finally, it "contradicts the whole tenor of the New Testament in making the life, and not the death, of Christ the most significant and important feature of His work. The constant allusions to the death of Christ as the source of salvation, as well as the symbolism of the ordinances, cannot be explained upon a theory which regards Christ as a mere example, and considers His sufferings as incidents, rather than essentials of His work" (Strong).

✓ B. The Bushnellian, or Moral Influence Theory of the Atonement.

a. Statement.

"This theory holds, like the Socinian, that there is no principle of the Divine nature which is propitiated by Christ's death; but that this death is a manifestation of the love of God, suffering in and with the sins of His creatures. Christ's atonement, therefore, is the merely natural consequence of His taking human nature upon Him; and is a suffering, not of penalty in man's stead, but of the combined woes and griefs which the living of a human life involves. This atonement has effect, not to satisfy Divine justice but so to reveal Divine love as to soften human hearts and to lead them to repentance; in other words, Christ's sufferings were necessary, not in order to remove an obstacle to the pardon of sinners which exists in the mind of God, but in order to convince sinners that there exists no such obstacle" (Strong).

NOTE—This theory was held by Horace Bushnell, of New England, and by Robertson, Maurice, Campbell, and Young, of Great Britain, and by Schleiermacher and Ritschl, of Germany.

b. Objections.

- (a) It is open to the same objection as the example theory of the atonement, in that it magnifies a subordinate into the principal effect of Christ's death. Our Lord's sufferings do produce a moral effect upon men; but suffering WITH the sinner is one thing and suffering IN HIS STEAD quite another.
- (b) Again, as Dr. Strong points out, like the example theory, it rests upon false philosophical principles: as, "that righteousness is identical with benevolence, instead of conditioning it; that God is subject to an eternal law of love, instead of being Himself the source of all law; that the aim of penalty is the reformation of the offender."

- (c) Again, it furnishes no proper reason for Christ's sufferings. "While it shows that the Saviour necessarily suffers from His contact with human sin and sorrow, it gives no explanation of that constitution of the universe which makes suffering the consequence of sin, not only to the sinner, but also to the innocent being who comes into contact with sin. The holiness of God, which is manifested in this constitution of things and which requires this atonement, is entirely ignored" (Strong).
- (d) Again, it contradicts the teaching of the Scriptures, like the example theory, in that it asserts that the atonement was necessary, not to satisfy God's justice, but merely to reveal His love; that Christ's sufferings were not propitiatory and penal; and that the human conscience does not need to be propitiated by Christ's sacrifice before it can feel the moral influence of His sufferings.
- (e) Again, "it can be maintained only by wresting from their obvious meaning those passages of Scripture which speak of Christ as suffering for our sins; which represent His blood as accomplishing something in heaven when presented there by our Intercessor; which declare forgiveness to be a remitting of past offenses upon the ground of Christ's death; and which describe justification as a pronouncing, not a making, just" (Strong).
- (f) And again, "this theory confounds God's method of saving men with men's experience of being saved. It makes the atonement itself consist of its effect in the believer's union with Christ and the purifying influence of that union upon the character and life" (Strong).
- (g) Finally, "the theory confines the influence of the atonement to those who have heard it,—thus excluding patriarchs and heathen. But the Scriptures represent Christ as being the Saviour of all men in the sense of securing them grace, which, but for His atoning work, could never have been bestowed consistently with the Divine holiness" (Strong).

C. The Grotian, or Governmental Theory of the Atonement.

a. Statement.

"The vicarious sufferings of Christ are an atonement for sin as a conditional substitute for penalty, fulfilling, on the forgiveness of sin, the obligation of justice and the office of penalty in moral government" (John Miley, of Drew).

"This theory holds that the atonement is a satisfaction, not to any internal principle of the divine nature, but to the necessities of government. God's government of the universe cannot be maintained, nor can the Divine law preserve its authority over its subjects, unless the pardon of offenders is accompanied by some exhibition of the high estimate which God sets upon His law and the heinous guilt of violating it. Such an exhibition of Divine regard for the law is furnished in the sufferings and death of Christ. Christ does not suffer the precise penalty of the law, but God graciously accepts His suffering as a substitute for the penalty. This bearing of substituted suffering on the part of Christ gives the divine law such hold upon the consciences and hearts of men, that God can pardon the guilty upon their repentance, without detriment to the interests of His government" (Strong).

NOTE—This theory was originated by Hugo Grotius, the Dutch jurist and theologian (1583-1645). It is commonly known as Arminianism.

b. Objections.

- (a) Like the example and moral influence theories, it has the fatal defect of substitution for the principal aim of the atonement a subordinate one, namely, the securing of the interests of God's government.
- (b) Like the two former theories, it rests upon false philosophical principles: "that utility is the ground of moral obligation; that law is an expression of the will, rather than of the nature, of God; that the aim of penalty is to deter from the commission of offenses; and that righteousness is resolvable into benevolence" (Strong).
- (c) Again, it "ignores and virtually denies that immanent holiness of God of which law with its threatened penalties, and the human conscience with its demand for punishment, are only finite reflections. There is something back of government, and if the atonement satisfies government, it must be by satisfying that justice of God, of which government is the expression" (Strong).

- (d) Again, it "makes that to be an exhibition of justice which is not an exercise of justice; the atonement being, according to this theory, not an execution of law, but an exhibition of regard for law, which will make it safe to pardon the violators of law. Such a scenic representation can inspire respect for law, only so long as the essential unreality of it is unsuspected" (Strong).
- (e) Again, it makes the sufferings of Christ in the garden and on the cross inexplicable "upon the theory that the atonement was a histrionic (that is, a kind of theatrical) exhibition of God's regard for His government, and can be explained only upon the view that Christ actually endured the wrath of God against human sin" (Strong).
- (f) Again, "the actual power of the atonement over the human conscience and heart is due, not to its exhibiting God's regard for law, but to its exhibiting an actual execution of law, and an actual satisfaction of violated holiness made by Christ in the sinner's stead" (Strong).
- (g) Finally, "the theory contradicts all those passages of Scripture which represent the atonement as necessary; as propitiating God Himself; as being a revelation of God's righteousness; as being an execution of the penalty of the law; as making salvation a matter of debt to the believer, on the ground of what Christ has done; as actually purging our sins, instead of making that purging possible; as not simply assuring the sinner that God may now pardon him on account of what Christ has done, but that Christ has actually wrought out a complete salvation, and will bestow it upon all who come to Him" (Strong).

D. The Irvingian, or Theory of Gradually Extirpated Depravity.

a. Statement.

"This theory holds that, in His incarnation, Christ took human nature as it was in Adam, not before the Fall, but after the Fall,—human nature, therefore, with its inborn corruption and predisposition to evil; that, notwithstanding the possession of this tainted and depraved nature, Christ, through the power of the Holy Spirit, or of His Divine nature, not only kept His human nature from manifesting itself in any actual or personal sin, but completely purified it through struggle and suffering, until in His death He completely extirpated its original depravity, and reunited it to God. This subjective purification of human nature in the person of Jesus Christ constitutes His atonement, and men are saved, not by any objective propitiation, but only by becoming through faith partakers of Christ's new humanity" (Strong)

NOTE—This theory was elaborated by Edward Irving, of England, (1792-1834) and is held in substance by some German scholars.

b. Objections.

- (a) It recognizes an important truth in the fact of the new humanity of Christ, of which all believers are partakers by faith; but it denies the fact of an objective atonement, through which alone we can receive this new spiritual humanity.
- (b) "It rests upon false fundamental principles, namely: that law is identical with the natural order of the universe, and as such, is an exhaustive expression of the will and nature of God; that sin is simply a power of moral evil within the soul, instead of also involving an objective guilt and desert of punishment; that penalty is the mere reaction of law against the transgressor, instead of being also the revelation of a personal wrath against sin; that the evil taint of human nature can be extirpated by suffering its natural consequences,—penalty in this way reforming the sinner" (Strong).
- (c) It contradicts the plain teaching of Scripture; namely, "with regard to Christ's freedom from all taint of human depravity; misrepresents His life as a growing consciousness of the underlying corruption of His human nature, which culminated at Gethsemane and Calvary; and denies the truth of His own statements when it declares that He must have died on account of His own depravity, even though none were to be saved thereby" (Strong).
- (d) Again, "it makes the active obedience of Christ and the subjective purification of His human nature to be the chief features of His work, while the Scriptures make His death and passive bearing of penalty the center of all, and ever regard Him as One who is personally pure and who vicariously bears the punishment of the guilty" (Strong).

- (e) Finally, the theory requires the "surrender of the doctrine of Justification, as a merely declaratory act of God; and requires such a view of the Divine holiness, expressed only through the order of nature, as can be maintained only upon principles of pantheism" (Strong).

NOTE—The theory rests upon three chief arguments: First, that Paul teaches it in Romans 8:3: "God having sent His own Son IN THE LIKENESS OF SINFUL FLESH." To this Dr. Farr replies: "If Paul's language were 'in sinful flesh,' the theory would be plainly taught, but it is not. His words signify that the flesh of Christ was like the flesh of sin, inasmuch as it was flesh, but unlike, inasmuch as it was not affected with sin. Paul could not have said, 'in sinful flesh' without making Christ partaker of sin. He could not have said merely, 'in flesh,' for then the bond between the manhood of Jesus and sin would have been wanting. He says, 'in likeness of flesh and sin,' meaning that Christ had a nature like sinful human nature but He had not Himself a sinful nature." Second, that it is clearly implied in the susceptibility of Christ to temptation and especially in knowing by experience how to succor those who are tempted, the latter being sinners. Again Dr. Farr replies: "This argument is plausible, but not conclusive. For if it be necessary to have a depraved nature in order to feel the force of temptation, then Adam and the angels must have been created with depraved natures. Also, if it be necessary to have been in the moral nature of sinners who are tempted, in order to succor them, Christ must have had not only a sinful nature but also a habit of sinning to qualify Him for His work." Third, that it is implied in a proper view of the atonement, because humanity in its fallen nature was summed up in the humanity of Christ and in that humanity paid the just penalty for all its sin. Once again Dr. Farr answers: "But the idea that the human nature of Christ was the whole human nature, in any other sense than that in which human nature is entire in any other, is a mere fiction and fancy. If He bore the penalty of sin at all, it was not the penalty of His own personal sin, or sinfulness, but the penalty due to others for their sins. Bearing the penalty of His own sinfulness would not help them, unless it were in turn to bear the penalty of their sinfulness. This is self-evident and if there were anything vicarious in His suffering it presupposes His holiness rather than His sinfulness."

E The Anselmic, or Commercial Theory of the Atonement.

a. Statement.

"This holds that sin is a violation of the Divine honor or majesty, and, as committed against an infinite being, deserves an infinite punishment; that the majesty of God requires Him to execute punishment, while the love of God pleads for the sparing of the guilty; that this conflict of Divine attribute is eternally reconciled by the voluntary sacrifice of the God-man, who bears in the virtue of the dignity of His person the intensively infinite punishment of sin, which must otherwise have been suffered extensively and eternally by sinners; that this suffering of the God-man presents to the Divine majesty an exact equivalent for the deserved sufferings of the elect; and that, as the result of this satisfaction of the Divine claims, the elect sinners are pardoned and regenerated."

NOTE—This theory was first held by Anselm, of Canterbury, (1033-1109) who propounded it as a substitute for an earlier patristic view that Christ's death was a ransom paid to Satan, to deliver sinners from his power. Many Scotch theologians hold this view.

b. Objections.

- (a) It recognized an all-important truth in the fact that Christ's death satisfied a principle of the nature of Deity, but it errs in representing the majesty of honor as higher than the holiness of God; while it is seriously at fault in admitting a conflict between the Divine attributes.
- (b) It overlooks entirely the value of the active obedience of Christ, and of His holy life.
- (c) It gives "disproportionate weight to those passages of Scripture which represent the atonement under commercial analogies, as the payment of a ransom or debt, to the exclusion of those which describe it as an ethical fact, whose value is to be estimated not quantitatively, but qualitatively" (Strong).
- (d) It limits the extent of the atonement to the elect, thus ignoring the teaching of the Scripture that Christ died for all.
- (e) It is "defective in holding to a merely external transfer of the merit of Christ's work, while it does not clearly state the internal ground of that transfer, in the union of the believer with Christ" (Strong).

F. Substitutional, or Satisfaction Theory of the Atonement. This theory, the first suggestions of which are found in the writings of Augustine (4th century), was elaborated by John Calvin (16th century). It is commonly known as Calvinism; sometimes it is called the "Orthodox Theory," or "Ethical Theory." It is, we believe, the true Scriptural view.

a. Preliminary Points.

- (a) The Theory holds to a two-fold element in Christ's substitution, namely: a vicarious obedience (known theologically as "active obedience") for righteousness, and vicarious punishment (known theologically as "passive obedience") for sin. Thus, Christ takes the place of sinners in both penalty and precept, and, as their substitute, endures the punishment which on account of sin they deserve, and in His obedience fulfills the righteousness required of them.

(b) Two Kinds of Substitution.

There are two kinds of substitution; namely, unconditional, which grants full and absolute deliverance to those for whom substitution is made; and conditional, which grants deliverance to those for whom substitution is made only on the terms agreed upon between the one who makes the substitution and the one who accepts it. Christ's substitution was conditional, dependent upon the repentance and faith of sinners, with reference to the sins of men (personal sins) and unconditional with reference to the "sin of the world" (the guilt of the Adamic sin, attached to the world or race).

(c) Two Kinds of Satisfaction.

"The satisfaction of Christ means all He has done to satisfy the demands of the holiness and law of God in the place of and in behalf of sinners." There are two kinds of satisfaction; namely, Pecuniary, a money payment, which can be made by anyone, and PENAL, blood payment which can be made only by the guilty. Christ's satisfaction was penal; the atonement was in His blood.

(d) Three Kinds of Penal Satisfaction.

There are three kinds of penal (that is, vicariously penal) satisfaction. First, IDENTICAL. Christ's death was not identical because the death of one could not be the same as the death of many; Mark 10:45. Second, EQUAL. Christ's satisfaction was not equal, because the death of the entire race of finite beings would not be equal to the death of the Infinite Being, Jesus Christ. Third, EQUIVALENT. Christ's satisfaction was equivalent, because one infinite factor, Jesus Christ, is inconceivably greater than all the finite factors making up the race of Adam. Illustration: a gold eagle ($10) weighs less than 500 pennies, but has double the value.

b. The Two Questions Stated.

There are two questions which conduct us into the heart of the atonement. And the answers to these questions give us its true philosophy. First: What did the atonement accomplish? Or, what was the object of Christ's death? Second: What were the means used? Or, how could Christ justly die? The answer to the former question views the atonement in its relation to God. The answer to the latter question views the atonement in its relation to man. Again, the answer to the first question is an unfolding of the meaning of Romans 3:25, 26. The answer to the second question is an unfolding of the meaning of II Cor. 5:21.

c. The First Question Considered.

What did the atonement accomplish? Or, what was the object of Christ's death? Briefly, the answer is three-fold:

- (a) It satisfied the outraged holiness of God; Ps. 22; Isa. 53; Rom. 3:25, 26; 4:25; 8:3; Gal. 1:4; 3:13; Heb. 9:15; I John 2:2; 4:10.
- (b) It avenged the violated law of God; Gen. 2:17; Ezek. 18:4, 20; Rom. 6:23.
- (c) It exhibited the love of God, thereby furnishing man a motive for repentance from sin and faith towards Christ; John 3:16; 15:13; Rom. 5:8; I Pet. 2:21; I John 4:9, 10.

NOTE 1—In viewing this aspect of the Atonement, Dr. Strong declares: "Its necessity is grounded in the holiness of God, of which conscience in man is a finite reflection. There is an ethical principle in the Divine nature, which demands that sin shall be punished. Aside from its results, sin is essentially ill-deserving. As we who are made in God's image mark our growth in purity by the increasing quickness with which we detect impurity, and the increasing hatred which we feel toward it, so infinite purity is a consuming fire to all iniquity. As there is an ethical demand in our natures that not only others' wickedness, but our own wickedness, be visited with punishment, and a keen conscience that cannot rest till it has made satisfaction to justice for its misdeeds, so there is an ethical demand of God's nature that penalty follows sin." The same writer continues: "Punishment is the constitutional reaction of God's being against moral evil—the self-assertion of infinite holiness against its antagonist and would-be destroyer. In God this demand is devoid of all passion, and is consistent with infinite benevolence. It is a demand that cannot be evaded, since the holiness from which it springs is unchanging. The Atonement is, therefore, a satisfaction of the ethical demand of the Divine nature, by the substitution of Christ's penal sufferings for the punishment of the guilty. This substitution is unknown to mere law, and above and beyond the powers of law. It is an operation of grace. Grace, however, does not violate or suspend law, but takes it up into itself and fulfills it. The righteousness of law is maintained, in that the source of all law, the Judge and Punisher, Himself, voluntarily submits to bear the penalty, and bears it in the human nature that has sinned. Thus the atonement answers the ethical demand of the Divine nature that sin be punished if the offender is to go free. The interests of the Divine government are secured as a first subordinate result of this satisfaction to God, Himself, of whose nature the government is an expression: while, as a second subordinate result, provision is made for the needs of human nature—on the one hand the need of objective satisfaction to the ethical demand of punishment for sin, and on the other hand the need of a manifestation of Divine love and mercy that will affect the heart and move it to repentance."

NOTE 2—On Romans 3:25, 26. These verses expand the subject of the epistle—the revelation of the "righteousness of God," righteousness being that which God both provides and accepts. This righteousness is mentioned in 1:17; and in 1:18-3:20, it is shown to be the only means whereby both Jew and Gentile can be saved. The commentator Meyer points out that in verse 25 the phrase "in His blood" is to be taken with the verb "set forth." The purpose of this setting forth in Christ's blood he says is "for the display of God's judicial and punitive righteousness, which received its satisfaction in the death of Christ as a propitiatory offering, and was thereby practically demonstrated and exhibited." On the expression "for the remission (literally, passing over) of sins that are passed," Meyer's comment is: "because He (God) had allowed the pre-Christian sins to go without punishment, whereby His righteousness has been lost sight of and obscured, and had come to need an exhibition to men." "Omittance," he says, "is not acquaintance; the passing over or passing by is intermediate between pardon and punishment. 'Through the forbearance of God' expresses the motive of the 'passing over or passing by.' Before Christ's sacrifice, God's administration was a scandal—it needed vindication. The atonement is God's answer to the charge of freeing the guilty." On verse 26 Meyer says that it presents the final purpose of God's act as set forth in verse 25, namely, "God's being just and His appearing just in consequence of this." On the whole passage Strong's comment is that it shows: (1) That Christ's death is a propitiatory sacrifice; (2) That its first and main effect is upon God; (3) That the particular attribute of God which demands the atonement is His justice, or holiness; (4) That the satisfaction of this holiness is the necessary condition of God's justifying the believer.

d. The Second Question Considered.

With respect to the atonement, what were the means used: or how could Christ justly die? Briefly, the answer is three-fold:

- (a) He took our flesh; John 1:14; Rom. 8:3; Gal. 4:4; Heb. 2:14-18.
- (b) He inherited our guilt; 2 Cor. 5:21; Gal. 3:13.
- (c) He bore our penalty; Isa. 53:4-5; Matt. 20:28; II Cor. 5:21; Gal. 2:20; 3:13; I Pet. 2:24.

The consequences of Adam's sin, both to himself and to his posterity, are:

First, depravity, or corruption of human nature.
Second, guilt, or obligation to make satisfaction for sin through the holiness and law of God.

Third, penalty, or actual endurance of loss or suffering as punishment for sin.

NOTE 1—If Christ had entered the world in the natural way, He would have had depravity; but through His virgin birth He escaped it: Luke 1:35; II Cor. 5:21; Heb. 7:26. However, because of His partaking of our common humanity, Christ inherited guilt and could therefore justly bear penalty. (The word guilt is used in two senses: First, blameworthiness, or depravity; and second, liability to punishment, or obligation to make satisfaction for sin. In the latter sense only can it be applied to Christ). Moreover, the guilt which our Lord inherited by birth was not, of course, the guilt of personal sin. It could not be. It was primarily the guilt of Adam's sin, the guilt of the first, or original transgression. But it was also the guilt of our sin—yours and mine. This is true because as the branches are organically and vitally united to the tree, so we are racially and vitally united with Adam. Thus, "the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all;" Isa. 53:6. An illustration may make clear how Christ can justly suffer exposure to our punishment. A murderer is hanged for his crime. A posthumous child is born and grows up personally guiltless of his father's sin. Nevertheless, other children shun the child, as the son of an executed murderer! It is innocent, yet it bears the despised and rejected name of its father. The boy lives under the cloud of shame and disgrace hanging over the father's name, simply because he has been born into the family. He cannot escape it. So, when Christ became partaker of our common humanity and was born into the human family, He inherited the curse, resting upon the name of our father Adam. He could not escape it. Indeed, it was a just ground of His substitutional death for us. See Gal. 3:13.

Having the second question we are considering in view, Dr. Strong says: "Christ stands in such relation to humanity, that what God's holiness demands, Christ is under obligation to pay, longs to pay, inevitably does pay, and pays so fully, in virtue of His two-fold nature, that every claim of justice is satisfied, and the sinner who accepts what Christ has done is saved. We have seen how God can justly demand satisfaction; we now show how Christ can justly make it; or, in other words, how the innocent can justly suffer for the guilty. The solution lies in Christ's union with humanity. The first result of that union is obligation to suffer for men, since, being one with the race, Christ had a share in the responsibility of the race to the law and the justice of God. In Him humanity was created; at every stage of its existence humanity was upheld by His power; as the immanent God, He was the life of the race and of every member of it. Christ's sharing of man's life justly and inevitably subjected Him to man's exposures and liabilities, and especially to God's condemnation on account of sin. Christ's union with the race in His incarnation is only the outward and visible expression of a prior union with the race which began when He created it. As in Him were all things created and in Him all things consist or hold together (Col. 1:16-17), it follows that He who is the life of humanity must, though personally pure, be involved in responsibility for all human sin and "it was necessary that the Christ should suffer" (Acts 17:3). This suffering was the enduring of the reaction of the Divine holiness against sin and so was a bearing of penalty (Isa. 53:6; Gal. 3:13); but it was also the voluntary execution of a plan that antedated creation (Phil. 2:6, 7), and Christ's sacrifice in time showed what had been in the heart of God from eternity. (Heb. 9:14; Rev. 13:8)."

NOTE 2—On Cor. 5:21. This verse gives us scriptural support for the view that Christ inherited our guilt and so justly inherited our penalty. Notice these three points:

1. Our Lord had no depravity. "Him who knew no sin;" This expression teaches us Christ's sinlessness.
3. Our Lord bore our penalty. "He was made to be a sin-offering for us." The term sin here must carry the double meaning of guilt and penalty; Heb 10:18. Says Dr. Strong: "Penalty and sin are correlates; if Christ inherited penalty, it must have been because he inherited guilt. This subjection to the common guilt of the race was intimated in Jesus' circumcision (Luke 2:21), and His ritual purification (Luke 2:22-24; cf Ex. 13:2, 13), and in His baptism (Mt. 3:15)."

QUESTIONS ON THE DOCTRINE OF CHRISTOLOGY

1. What three-fold office work does Jesus Christ have, according to the Scriptures?
2. Quote a passage of Scripture containing the predictive announcement that Christ should be a prophet.
3. When did the prophetic ministry of Christ officially begin and end?
4. Give the primary and secondary ideas of the prophetic office and also the functions exercised by the Old Testament prophets.
5. In what three ways did the Old Testament prophet fulfill his prophetic ministry?
6. In what five ways did Christ fulfill His prophetic ministry?
7. Quote one passage from the Old Testament and one from the New Testament showing Christ's priesthood to be a fulfillment of prophecy.
8. Give the three-fold scope of priesthood and show how Christ fulfills these priestly functions.
9. From what is Christ's office as King to be distinguished, of what does it consist, and when will it be fully exercised?
10. What do the Scriptures teach concerning the purpose of Christ's sufferings?
11. What relation does holiness sustain to love and happiness?
12. How does the universe as a reflection of God express His holiness?
13. What two-fold work was it necessary for Christ, the Logos, as the Revealer of God and the Life of humanity, to do with reference to human sin?
14. As our life and personality find their completion and perfection only in Christ, who is generic humanity, what does humanity do through Him, their representative, in His condemnation of sin and suffering which is sin's penalty?
15. Of what is the historical work of the incarnate Christ the revelation, and what relation does it sustain to that which it reveals?
16. How do the Scriptures set forth the fact of the atoning death of Christ?
17. Give some of the Old Testament types of the Atonement and quote one passage with one of them?
18. Give some of the predictive pictures of the Redeemer.
19. What does the Hebrew root for atonement, "Kaphar," signify and mean? Quote one passage which contains both significance and meaning.
20. Give the active and passive sides of Reconciliation and quote one passage with each.
21. Give the significance of the Greek noun and the meaning of the Latin word which are translated "Propitiation," and show how the death of Christ expresses these, quoting one passage proving it.
22. Give the meaning of the two words "Redemption and Ransom," and show their relation or application to Christ and His death, quoting one passage with each.

23. Give the meaning of "Substitution," showing how it is true of Christ's work for sinners, quoting one passage containing the idea.
24. What three things are declared to be the center and heart of the Atonement? Quote one passage with each.
25. What three-fold relationship does the Atonement sustain to God? Quote one passage with each.
26. Quote one passage showing the Atonement to be the basis of our reconciliation.
27. Give the three-fold relation of the Atonement to the Law.
28. Quote one passage showing the sacrifice of Christ to have been necessary.
29. Quote one passage showing the death of Christ to have been voluntary.
30. Quote one passage showing the death of Christ to be vicarious.
31. What were the beneficial effects of Christ's Atonement?
32. Describe the four-fold necessity for the Atonement.
33. Explain the two-fold distinctions to be made in considering the extent of the Atonement, and quote one passage containing it.
34. Quote one passage bearing on the universality of the Atonement, and one on its limitation.
35. Name and define the two-fold element in the substitutionary theory of the Atonement.
36. Give the two kinds of substitution and show how they apply to Christ and His work.
37. Give the two kinds of satisfaction and show which kind Christ made.
38. Give the three kinds of penal satisfaction and show how Christ's could be the third only.
39. What are the two questions which conduct us into the heart of the Atonement?
40. What are the two relations of the Atonement viewed by these questions, and what two passages of Scripture do they unfold?
41. What is the three-fold answer to the first question?
42. What is the three-fold answer to the second question?
43. What are the three consequences of Adam's sin to himself and to his posterity?
44. Give the two senses in which guilt is used and show in which it may be applied to Christ.
45. What was the nature of the guilt which Christ inherited, negatively and positively?
46. Give an illustration showing how Christ could inherit the guilt or curse of sin.

CHAPTER FOUR

PNEUMATOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

- A. THE PERSONALITY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.
- B. THE DEITY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.
- C. THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

A. The Personality of the Holy Spirit.

The term "Person" immediately introduces an insurmountable difficulty—that, namely, of attempting to express the infinite in finite terms.

It has been argued that personality and absolute existence are contradictions; that God can not be, at one and the same time, a Person and Infinite. That argument is based upon the assumption that the term "Person" is capable of concise and final definition. That is a false assumption. It supposes that perfect personality exists in human beings. This is not so; God alone has perfect personality. That of every other being is limited. In other words, God is not a magnified man, rather, it may be said that man is a limited God. God is not in the image of man: man is in the image of God, and no definite, final deduction can be made concerning God from the study of human life. If man were the one, the final, the absolute unit, then the argument would hold that God can not be a Person and Infinite. If He alone be final and absolute, then personality in man is to be looked upon as being imperfect and limited. It is possible to form some conception of Divine personality by a study of the human, because man is made in the likeness of God; but wherever the endeavor is made to build up the Divine from the suggestion given in man, it must be remembered that the factors of personality in man are finite, while in God they are infinite.

Three things at least are combined in personality—intelligence, emotion, and volition. These essential parts of personality are limited in human beings, but it is not unthinkable that they may have an illimitable existence and yet be included in personality. It is not unthinkable that man within a circumscribed area, is a picture of the Divine; but that yet, by so much as he is circumscribed and limited, he is not himself divine. In this sense man was made in the image of God; but that of which he is the image is like him, yet unlike him. It is unlike him in the fact that all that is found in man of essential majesty and grandeur in a limited degree, is to be found in God Himself, unlimited and illimitable. The Holy Spirit, then, is a person, possessed of will, intelligence, and emotion in an infinite degree.

NOTE—In the beginning of the third century of the Christian era, Paul of Samosata advanced a theory denying the Deity of Christ and regarding the Holy Spirit as an influence, as an exertion of a Divine energy and power. He attempted to finally explain the terms of the New Testament and of Scripture; and in his attempt to save the last definite, formulated word, he found he must cut away certain supernatural mysteries that surrounded the doctrine of God as contained in Revelation; and declared that there was no Trinity, that Jesus was not Divine, and that the Spirit was simply the influence moving out from God, the energy of God exerted upon men. About the time of the Reformation, two men, Laelius Socinus, and his nephew Faustus Socinus, revived the theory, and many accepted it. These facts in the history of the church are mentioned in order that it may be understood whence came the teaching, the influence of which was like leaven, spreading far more widely through the church than the circle of those who actually called themselves Socinians. This circle of people had a well defined doctrine to teach. The great mass of Christians refused to accept the doctrine, but nevertheless passed unconsciously under its chilling influence, and unknowingly, almost the whole church came to think of the Spirit of God as an influence, if not to speak of Him as such. In the Authorized Version, the personal pronoun which refers to the Holy Spirit is translated by the neuter "it," as an index of the trend of thought among Christian people at that time. Men prayed of the Spirit as of "it," an influence, an energy, proving that the Socinian teaching had chilled the zeal and enthusiasm of the Christian doctrine concerning the Holy Spirit. A striking evidence of the revival of the truth concerning the personality of the Holy Spirit is the reintroduction into the revised version of the masculine pronoun wherever the Spirit is referred to. This is an indication of the fact that God is calling His people everywhere to a recognition of this most important doctrine of the Holy Spirit as a Person.

The Personality of the Holy Spirit is shown by the following:

I Designations proper to personality are given Him.

1. The pronoun used for the Holy Spirit is masculine, though the noun translated "spirit" is neuter: John 16:14.
2. The name "Paracletos" translated "Comforter" can not be taken as the name of any abstract influence. The Comforter, Instructor, Patron, Guide, Advocate, whom this term brings before us must be a person. This is evident from the application of the term to Christ in I John 2:1; compare John 15:26.

II His name is mentioned in immediate connection with other persons, and in such a way as to clearly imply personality.

1. In connection with Christians: Acts 15:28.
2. In connection with Christ: John 16:14 with John 17:4.
3. In connection with the Father and the Son: Matt. 28:19; Jude 20, 21; II Cor. 13:14.

III He performs acts proper to personality: that which searches, knows, speaks, testifies, reveals, convinces, commands, strives, moves, helps, guides, creates, recreates, sanctifies, inspires, makes intercession, orders the affairs of the church, performs miracles, raises the dead, can not be a mere influence, efflux, power, or attribute of God, but must be a person: Gen. 1:2; 6:3; Luke 12:12; John 3:8; 16:8; Acts 2:4; 8:29; 10:19, 20; 13:2; 16:6, 7; Rom. 8:11, 26, 27; 15:19; I Cor. 2:10, 11; 12:8-11; I Pet. 1:2; II Pet. 1:21.

IV He is affected as a person by the acts of others: that which can be resisted, grieved, vexed, and blasphemed, must be a person, for only a person can perceive an insult and be offended. The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost can not be merely blasphemy against a power or attribute of God, since in that case, blasphemy against God would be a less crime than blasphemy against His power. That against which the unpardonable sin is committed must be a person: Isa. 63:10; Matt. 12:31, 32; Acts 5:3, 4, 9; 7:51; Eph. 4:30.

V The ascription to the Holy Spirit of a personal subsistence distinct from that of the Father and of the Son can not be explained as personification.

1. This would be to interpret sober prose by the canons of poetry. Such sustained personification is contrary to the genius of even Hebrew poetry, in which Wisdom itself is most naturally interpreted as designating a personal existence.

2. Such an interpretation would render a multitude of passages either tautological, meaningless, or absurd,—as can be easily seen by substituting for the name Holy Spirit the terms which are wrongly held to be its equivalents; such as the power, or influence, or efflux, or attribute of God.

NOTE—Try Acts 10:38 as an example: “God anointed Him (Jesus) with the Holy Spirit and with power—anointed Him with power and with power; Rom. 15:13—“Abound in hope in the power of the Holy Spirit”—in the power of the power of God, 19—“In the power of signs and wonders, in the power of the Holy Spirit”—in the power of the power of God; I Cor 2:4—“Demonstrations of the Spirit and of power”—demonstration of power and of power. Such a substitution is thus shown to be impossible.

3. It is contradicted, moreover, by all those passages in which the Holy Spirit is distinguished from His own gifts: Luke 1:35; 4:14; I Cor. 12:4, 8, 11; Rom. 8:26.

NOTE—In the passage in Corinthians after mention of the gifts of the Spirit is made, such as wisdom, knowledge, faith, healings, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, interpretation of tongues, all these are traced to the Spirit who bestows them. Here is not only giving, but giving discreetly, in the exercise of an independent will such as belongs only to a person. The passage in Romans must be interpreted, if the Holy Spirit is not a person distinct from the Father, as meaning that the Holy Spirit intercedes with Himself.

B. The Deity of the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit is not only a person but a Divine person.

NOTE—Another heresy arose in the church in the fourth century. Arius, a presbyter of Alexandria, taught that God is one eternal person; that He created a Being infinitely superior to the angels, His only begotten Son; that this only begotten Son of God did in His turn exercise His supernatural power by the creation of a third Person, that third Person being the Holy Spirit. The difference between Socinianism and Arianism lies in the recognition by the latter of the personality of the Spirit while denying His proper Deity. According to Arius, the Holy Spirit is a Person, a created Person; and if created, then not Creator; and if not Creator, then not Divine. The Nicene Creed was drawn up and adopted as a corrective to this error of Arianism, which had obtained a firm hold in the early Church.

Most assuredly the Scriptures teach not only the personality of the Spirit, but His Divine personality.

I He is spoken of as God: Acts 5:3, 4; I Cor. 3:16; 6:19; 12:4-6.

NOTE—Of the passage in I Cor. 12, Meyer says, “The Divine Trinity is here indicated in an ascending climax in such a way that we pass from the Spirit who bestows the gifts to the Lord (Christ) who is served by means of them, and finally to God, who as the absolute first cause and possessor of all Christian powers works the entire sum of all charismatic gifts (gifts bestowed by the Holy Spirit for use in the propagation of the truth, or the edification of the church, as in the working of miracles, healing, prophecy, or speaking with tongues, as in the early church) in all who are gifted.

II Divine Attributes and Perfections are Ascribed to Him.

1. Life: Rom. 8:2.
2. Truth: John 16:13.
3. Love: Rom. 15:30.
4. Holiness: Eph. 4:30.
5. Eternity: Heb. 9:14.
6. Omnipotence: Luke 1:35.
7. Omniscience: John 14:26; 16:12, 13, R. V.; I Cor. 2:10.

8. Omnipresence: Psa. 139:7-10.

III Divine Works are Ascribed to Him.

1. Creation: Job 33:4; Psa. 104:30.
2. Bestowal of Life: Gen. 2:7; John 6:63; Rom. 8:2.
3. Prophecy: II Sam. 23:2, 3; II Pet. 1:21.
4. Regeneration: John 3:3-8; Titus 3:5.
5. Resurrection: Rom. 8:11.

IV The Name of the Holy Spirit is coupled in equality with the names of God and Christ.

1. In the Apostolic Commission: Matt. 28:19, 20.
2. In the Apostolic Benediction: II Cor. 13:14.
3. In the Administration of the Church: I Cor. 12:4-6.
4. See also Eph. 4:4-6, where the name of the Holy Spirit appears first; and Rom. 15:30 where it occurs second.

V The Holy Spirit in the New Testament is identified with Jehovah of the Old Testament: Isa. 6:8-10 compared with Acts 28:25-27; Jer. 31:31-34 with Heb. 10:15-17; Ex. 16:7 with Heb. 3:7-9 and Psa. 95:8-11; Gen. 1:27 with Job. 33:4.

VI The Holy Spirit can be blasphemed, and this is possible only of God.

NOTE—As spirit is nothing less than the inmost principle of life, and the spirit of man is man himself, so the Spirit of God must be God Himself: See I Cor. 2:11. Thus the Scriptures teach that the Holy Spirit is a person having all the Divine attributes and able to do all Divine works. The mystery is acknowledged, and it is very profound. To finally explain it is impossible, but this impossibility is to be accounted for by human limitation, and by the fact that the finite can never fully grasp the infinite. The facts must be reverently accepted as forming an integral and necessary part of revealed religion; and this has been done by many throughout the history of the church, thus giving an added argument for the Divine personality of the Holy Spirit. Christian experience, expressed as it is in the prayers and hymns of the church, offers proof of the deity of the Holy Spirit similar to that offered for the Deity of Jesus Christ. When our eyes are opened to see Christ as Saviour, we are compelled to recognize the work in us of a Divine Spirit who has taken of the things of Christ and has shown them to us: and this Divine Spirit we necessarily distinguish from the Father and the Son.

C. The Work of the Holy Spirit.

In taking up the work of the Holy Spirit, a popular misconception needs to be removed. This is the result of the teaching of Sabellius; namely, that in creation, God the Father works; in redemption, God the Son works; and in Salvation, God the Spirit works. Another way of putting it is: that the Old Testament dispensation was the dispensation of the Father; the New Testament dispensation, the dispensation of the Son; and the present dispensation, the dispensation of the Spirit. Quite to the contrary, the Scriptures teach that in every manifestation of the works of God, the Father, the Son, and the Spirit are alike active. Thus, to use the classification of Sabellius, in creation, in redemption, and in salvation, we trace the working of each member of the Trinity. And in general, the working of each member of the Trinity is this: in every Divine activity, the power to bring forth proceeds from the Father; this might be called the authoritative power. The power to arrange proceeds from the Son; this might be called the executive power. And the power to bring to completion or to perfect proceeds from the Spirit: this might be called the energizing power: I Cor. 8:6; John 1:1-3; Psa. 33:6; Rom. 11:36; Job 33:4. Consequently, the office work of the Holy Spirit in every phase and sphere of the Divine activity is to bring forward to completion that which has been conceived by the Father and executed by the Son.

I The Work of the Holy Spirit in Relation to Creation.

The work of the Spirit in creation, and His perpetual presence and manifestation therein, are subjects full of fascination, and yet strangely neglected. So much attention has been given to the work of the Spirit in its regenerative aspect, that His generative activities have been in a large measure overlooked. The origin and preservation of everything in nature are spiritual.

NOTE—The sacred Writings abound in statements with regard to this aspect of the Spirit's work. What magnificent figures are contained in the words of the Psalmist in Psalm 18:9-12. "He bowed the heavens also, and came down; and thick darkness was under His feet. And He rode upon a cherub, and did fly: yea, He flew swiftly upon the wings of the wind. He made darkness His hiding-place, His pavilion round about Him; darkness of waters, thick clouds of the skies. At the brightness before Him His thick clouds passed, hailstones and coals of fire." Campbell Morgan says of this, "It is evident from a careful reading of this Psalm that it is a declaration of the perpetual presence of God in all such manifestations. Wherever thick darkness is, it is under the feet of God; whenever the wind passes with swift impetuosity, He flies upon the wings thereof; wherever darkness is, it is God's hiding place, a pavilion round about Him; whenever the darkness is dispersed, it is before the brightness of His rising. In every gleam of the glory of nature, there is the evidence of an ever-present God. Mrs. E. B. Browning sings,

"No lily muffled hum of a summer bee
But finds some coupling with the spinning stars;
No pebble at your foot but proves a sphere,
No chaffinch but implies the cherubim,
.....Earth's cramm'd with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes—
The rest sit round it and pluck blackberries."

The final words of that great doxology which Isaiah heard from the inner temple are of great interest in this connection: Isa. 6:1-3. "In the year that King Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple. Around Him stood the seraphim: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory." The uplifted Lord is the center of adoration in the courts of Heaven; but not there only is His splendour seen—"the whole earth is full of His glory."

A marvelous declaration of the fact of the presence of God in all nature is to be found also in the great Theophany of the book of Job; see Chapters 41, 42.

For the purpose of this study, it will be sufficient to consider certain definite statements of Scripture in which the work of the Holy Spirit in creation is clearly set forth in its varied aspects.

NOTE 2—Dr. Kuyper, the Dutch theologian says, "The special work of the Holy Spirit in creation is to lead creation to its destiny which is the glory of God." In other words, it has been His particular work to bring in, sustain, and mature life, order, and beauty in the universe.

1. Bringing order into the universe: Gen. 1:2. The first picture presented to us in the Scriptures is that of the Spirit brooding over chaos. Science agrees that the earth must have been in such ■ condition as this before the appearance of man. How this condition of things arose, whether through some mighty catastrophe overwhelming a previous order, or through the omnific word of God, no man can positively tell. Both Science and Revelation are silent so far as clear, dogmatic statement is concerned. These opening words of the Book of Genesis tell us that this planet was or became waste and void, and declare that for the accomplishment of the change from this condition to that of order, the Spirit brooded over the face of the waters. He acted as the administrator of the will of God as expressed by the Word of God. The will of God is that order should supercede disorder. The Word of God announces that will, beginning with the first utterance, "Let there be light." By the brooding of the Spirit over chaos, the light came. This is the unvarying order of the activity of God in creation. This is not an account of the first creation of matter. Concerning that, man has no definite knowledge, except as we read in Genesis 1:1, "In the beginning, God created the Heaven and the Earth." And then in the second verse, that the earth was or became waste and void. How long the interval between these verses, no man can tell. Scripture makes no pro-announcement thereupon, and the declarations of science are but surmises. But when the present order was established, it was by the Spirit of God brooding upon confusion and emptiness, as the Power through which the Divine will was realized. The earth as it is today, therefore, excepting the results of the curse caused by the fall, is the direct outcome of the action of the Holy Spirit.

2. Creating and garnishing the heavens: Psa. 33:6; Job 26:12, 13; Isa. 30:12, 13.

NOTE 1—These words of the Psalmist, "By the words of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth," are full of suggestiveness. "The word breath here," says an eminent authority, "might well be written with a capital letter—'The Breath of God's mouth'." Here again is revealed the will of Jehovah uttered by the Word of Jehovah, and accomplished by the Breath of His mouth; but the sweep of thought is greater here than in Genesis 1:2. It is not a description of the bringing of order to one small planet, but the record in a sentence of the creation of the heavens and all the host of them. The phrase includes all the myriad wonders of the universe around.

By the Word of God and by the Breath of His mouth, came the systems of which man is just beginning to learn that in their entirety they are undiscoverable. The point at which astronomical science has now arrived is an acknowledgement, that beyond the utmost reach of anything which can be studied through the agency of the telescope, lie illimitable space and innumerable worlds. This harmonizes with Jeremiah's statement, "The host of heaven can not be numbered:" Jer. 33:22.

NOTE 2—Take the passage in Job 26:13, "By His Spirit the heavens are garnished; His hand hath pierced the swift serpent." The meaning of the passage is obscure, but light is thrown on it by the context, V. 12, "He stirreth up the sea with His power, and by His understanding He smiteth through Rahab." It is a picture of the bringing back of the blue and the light to the heavens after the sweeping of the storm,—the beauty of the stars of light replacing the gloom of the black chaotic clouds of darkness, and this is done, we are told, by the Spirit of God.

3. Renewal of the face of the earth: Isa. 40:7, "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth because the breath of the Lord bloweth upon it." Psa 104:30, "Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, and thou renewest the face of the ground." The Spirit is the breath of renewal. Through death He ever leads to life.

NOTE—The declaration in the first passage at first sight is almost staggering. That the Spirit of God comes as the genial summer's zephyr upon nature is easy to understand; but it is difficult to believe that He comes also as the fierce blast of God. Yet it is certainly true. He brings death as a process and a necessity. The pitiless east wind has in it the breath of health. Let there be no more east wind, no more northeast wind, no more biting, keen blast of death, and what would become of nature. Surely Kingsley entered into the spirit of this when he sang:

"Welcome, wild North-easter!
Shame it is to see
Odes to every zephyr,
Ne'er a verse to thee.
Through the black fir forest
Thunder harsh and dry,
Scattering down the snowflakes
Off the curdled sky.
Come; and strong within us
Stir the Vikings blood,
Bracing brain and sinew;
Blow, thou wind of God."

When the east wind blows, and the flowers are nipped, and the blade of grass is curled and shriveled, then the Spirit of God is sweeping the ground and preparing for the springing of life in response to the kiss of His gentler breezes. See Psa. 104:30. Hence, we see in the second passage that that which follows the death wind of the Spirit is His life wind. The first is Winter, the second is Spring. Nothing ever finds its way to Spring save through Winter. The budding of life and the flowers that blossom upon the sod in Spring-time are the result of the east wind that swept the hills and valleys during the Winter days. These are not mere figures of speech. The cold and icy wind blows under the direction of the Spirit of God; and the wind which kisses earth and makes its smiling flowers, is the messenger of the self-same Spirit.

4. Sustaining the present physical order and supporting animal and vegetable life: Psa. 104:10-14 with v. 30. It is evident that, as by the power of the Spirit, cosmos was produced out of chaos, so by the ever-present and active power of the Spirit in the processes of nature, cosmos is maintained, and life in its varying forms is supported.
5. Giving life to man: Gen. 2:7; Job 33:4.

The second account of man's creation as found in Gen. 2, is an unfolding of the detailed facts in it, and a revealing of man's nature. Man is now shown as uniting in his own person the material with the spiritual, the earth with the heavens, the things that perish and pass with the things that abide forever. God made man of the dust of the earth—a material basis—and breathed into him the breath of lives, thus creating a spiritual being. Through that inbreathing by God, the conscious side of man's nature was born, and he became a living soul.

NOTE—The dust which was of the earth was devoid of self-consciousness. Man's power to enter into his new environment, his new relationship, his new companionship, was the result of the inbreathing of the Breath of lives by God. Man is not man, apart from the direct ministry and sustaining power of the Spirit of God. Everything that man is, in the essential facts of His being, which distinguish him from the animal, is due to this peculiar form of inbreathing, whereby man became a conscious soul. He was thus made the offshoot of God. In man, life was different from life anywhere else; in man life became light. In this sense, Christ "lighteth every man that cometh into the world." There was life in the plant and life in the lower animals; but when God inbreathed to man the Breath of lives, He bestowed a life in which lay the element of light. In man, creation first looked back into the face of God and knew Him. No lower form of life knows God. In all life there are present the power and energy of God; all things live, and move, and having their being in Him; but apart from man, none are conscious of it. In man, life became light, consciousness, knowingness. Man entered into the perfect environment of the Garden, knew it, appreciated it, and discovered God in it because there had been inbreathed to him the Breath of lives. Not only did he enter into environment, occupation, and government, but also into companionship. God made woman to be his companion. He entered into that new relation which created and conditioned the whole social range of human life in the power of the same Breath of lives. When man is thus viewed from the standpoint of original intention as seen in the picture of Edenic beauty and power, it is evident that the natural is spiritual and the spiritual is natural, and that there is no single aspect of human life which is not under the government of the inspiring Spirit of God.

II The Ministry of the Holy Spirit Prior to Pentecost.

1. From the Fall to the Messiah.

The whole being of man, ~~as we have seen~~, was conditioned before he sinned in the energy and wisdom of the Spirit. The knowledge of this fact man had lost by reason of his sin; and the Spirit resisted, was separated from the actualities of human life. From the moment of the Fall, a new form of His ministry began, which was partial, occasional, special, and prophetic of the great dispensation to be ushered in, when the true light of sacrifice had made plain the way for the clearer apprehension of God.

NOTE 2—The distinction of the work of the Spirit in the Old Testament era from that of the New is a difficult subject. After all is said that can be said, much more light is needed for clearness of apprehension and accuracy of statement. To begin with, it is commonly said, that the difference is expressed by two Greek prepositions: "upon" (epi) and "in" (en), i. e., that the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament dispensation came upon men, while in the New Testament dispensation, He indwells them. This, however, will not always hold, because in the Old Testament dispensation, the Holy Spirit indwelt men; while in the New Testament, He came upon men: Gen. 4:38; Ex. 31:3; Num. 27:18; Dan. 5:11; Luke 24:49; Acts 1:8. Perhaps the best point of approach to the subject is the Christian church. In the Old Testament, except in type and symbol, there is no church, the body of Christ, of which He is the head, and which is the temple of the Holy Ghost. Until after the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, the Spirit is not spoken of as creating a church by His own abiding indwelling. Neither is He spoken of as the one direct and only administrator of the affairs of such a body. And yet again, He is not spoken of as her sanctifier. All the other aspects of the Spirit's work are found—not continually or perpetually and in an abiding sense, as they are today, but as special occasions demanded.

We may say then, that, in the Old Testament age, chosen individuals were the object of the Spirit's grace for life and gifts for service; while in the New Testament and the present age, He works in and upon the body of Christ and individual members of that body. These two expressions, individual person, and the body of Christ, give us the key to the difference between the two dispensations: See I Cor. 12:13. This other distinction should also be noted in this connection, that in the Old Testament age, the Spirit came upon and filled men for specific work without reference to character. In the New Testament age, after the accomplishment of the work of the cross, this is never so: His filling for service always depends upon His application of the work of the Saviour for cleansing and holiness. The work of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament dispensation may be classified as follows:

- (1) Coming upon men: Judges 6:34; I Chron. 12:18; II Chron. 24:20. The same thought is expressed in each of these passages, in the phrase "The Spirit came upon them." The Hebrew word literally means that the Spirit clothed Himself with them—not that the Spirit fell upon them as anointing, but the Spirit took hold of them, passed into them, and made them the instruments through which He accomplished His work.
- (2) Coming mightily upon men: Judges 14:6; I Sam. 10:10; 16:13. The phrase here means literally forcing them into something. In these cases an entirely different word is used. The thought of it is that of forcing forward or of pushing. The literal meaning of the words that the Spirit attacked these men, came upon them with compulsion, forced them forward to a certain activity. Under the compulsion of the Spirit, Samson slew the lion, Saul joined the prophets, and uttered words of prophecy, and David went forward to the work of governing the people. How different is the manifestation of power: the slaying of a lion, the uttering of the truth of God, and the governing of the people; but in each case, the action was under the impulse of the Spirit of God.
- (3) Indwelling men: Of which Joseph and Joshua give us examples: Gen. 41:38; Num. 27:18. Pharaoh said that in Joseph there dwelt the Spirit of God, and that, therefore, he was discreet and wise. When a successor to Moses was needed for the government and leadership of the people, Joshua was chosen because in him dwelt the Spirit of God. Whether Pharaoh understood his own expression may be very doubtful, but it is certainly worthy of note that in each of the cases cited, the Spirit of God created fitness for government; and this fitness consisted not in autocratic, tyrannical power, but in discretion, wisdom, gentleness, and beauty of demeanor. Such were the manifestations of the indwelling of the Spirit in these men under the old covenant.
- (4) Fitting and filling men for special service: Ex. 31:1-7. Here we are told the Spirit of God filled certain men; and this expression is used only in connection with the work of making the tabernacle. Thus, the whole of that work in its exquisite perfection and glorious beauty was the outshining of the wisdom of the Holy Spirit.
These illustrations go to show that the Holy Spirit was always interested in and working among men; that He did not abide with them, but that for special purposes and at special points in their history, He equipped them for whatever the particular moment demanded.

NOTE 1—Another outline of the Holy Spirit's work in the Old Testament age is as follows:

1. His action upon the heart of individuals in saving grace: for example: Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Samuel, David, etc.; (Gen. 5:22-24; Heb. 11:5; Jude 14, 15) in bestowing grace for life and gifts for service.
2. His action upon prophets, priests and kings—a wholly external operation to qualify them for office; Lev. 8:10; I Sam. 1:10.
3. His action upon divinely appointed workmen in conferring gifts and talents for the service of the people; Ex. 31:2, 3, 6; Isa. 45:1; Zech. 4:6.

NOTE 2—In his little book, "Plain Papers on the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit," Dr. Scofield says: "In the Old Testament, the Spirit of God is revealed as a Divine person. As such, He is associated in the work of creation; strives with sinful man (Gen. 6:3); and enlightens the spirit of man (Job 32:8; Prov. 20:27); gives skill to the hand (Ex. 31:2-5); bestows physical strength (Judges 14:6); and qualifies the servants of God for a varied ministry (Ex. 28:3; 35: 21, 31; Num. 11:25-29; I Sam. Chaps. 16-17; II Sam. 23:2). To this should be added that operation of the Spirit by which the men of faith in the Old Testament ages were regenerated. While this doctrine is not explicitly taught in the Old Testament (except prophetically) our Lord's words in John 3:5, and Luke 13:28 leave no doubt as to the fact itself. Since the new birth is essential to seeing and entering the kingdom of God, and since the Old Testament saints are in that kingdom, it follows necessarily that they were born of the Spirit. But, since that was the period of knowledge, as Paul explains (Gal. Chaps. 3-4) they had not the indwelling Spirit of sonship. They were minors (under tutors and governors). It should be remembered also that to the Old Testament saint no way was revealed by which he might receive the Holy Spirit. All the offices of the Holy Spirit were reserved within the sovereign will of God. He sent His Spirit upon whomsoever He would. That the Spirit came upon an individual did not by any means prove him to be in salvation. Even a sincere believer had no assurance that the Holy Spirit might not forsake him (Psa. 51:11), whereas, the believer of this dispensation has the expressed promise of the abiding of the Spirit."

2. The Mission of the Holy Spirit during the Messianic period.

- (1) He filled and empowered John the Baptist, the forerunner of Jesus (Luke 1:15-17), for the service He was called upon to render. John's father and mother were also filled with the Holy Ghost (Luke 1:41, 67).
- (2) It was the generative power of the Holy Spirit that gave Jesus His physical nature and human body (Luke 1:35), thus making possible His virgin birth and sinless humanity.
- (3) The Holy Spirit anointed Jesus for His Messianic office (Luke 3:21, 22; 4:18, 19, 21).

NOTE—As the Spirit bore a close relationship to Jesus as a perfect and unfallen man, so also did He in His office and position as the Messiah.

- (4) The Holy Spirit filled and empowered Jesus as the servant of Jehovah for the accomplishment of His work (Luke 4:1, 14; Acts 10:38).
- (5) The Holy Spirit directed the earthly life and service of Jesus even after His resurrection (Luke 4:1; Acts 1:1, 2).
- (6) It was through the Holy Spirit, in some mysterious way that Jesus offered Himself in sacrifice to God (Heb. 4:19).
- (7) The Holy Spirit played an important part in the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead (Rom. 1:4; I Pet. 3:18).

- (8) It was according to the promise of Jesus Christ and at its fulfillment that the Holy Spirit was given at Pentecost; in a very real sense Jesus was the bestower of the Holy Spirit.

NOTE—The silence that had lasted for centuries, since the last prophet had spoken, was at last broken by John the Baptist who announced One whose distinguishing work should be that of baptizing with the Holy Ghost and with fire (Luke 3:16).

After Jesus had come on the scene, He assured the disciples that the Holy Spirit could be received in answer to prayer (Luke 11:13). They had requested Jesus to teach them how to pray (Luke 11:1), and this request resulted in their hearing the most startling announcement concerning spiritual matters that had ever fallen upon their ears. They were told that if they asked of God with understanding and importunity they should receive good gifts only, and the especially good gift of the Holy Spirit. The statement must have so staggered them as to surprise them almost into inaction; for it is evident that they never asked for the Spirit and, therefore, never received Him in answer to their own asking. This text is perpetually quoted as having a present day application. This is due to a failure to draw the line of distinction between the various phases of the Master's mission. These words were spoken to a handful of Jewish disciples gathered around a Jewish Messiah. He was unveiling to them a great secret in all of God's dealings with men—that God would give the Holy Spirit to men who asked, if they did so according to the law of prayer laid down. There is no evidence, however, that they ever had the Holy Spirit until that Spirit came along another line of communication. In Luke 11:13, Jesus revealed to the disciples the Word of God, the attitude of the Divine heart, the preparedness of the Father to bestow the wondrous gift of the Holy Spirit upon them, but there is no evidence whatever that they ever asked or ever received it in answer to prayer; and yet they never truly saw Christ nor understood His mission, nor entered into the deep or underlying secrets of His life, until after the Spirit had come upon them in answer to His asking (John 14:16; Acts 2:33). Cf. Luke 12:49-50 with 3:16; Acts 1:2; 2:3. See also John 4:13, 14; 6:35; 7:37-39; 20:21, 22).

III The Work of the Holy Spirit in Relation to Revelation.

1. He is the Author of the Scriptures.

- (1) He gave special gifts and qualifications to the human authors of the books of the Bible for the unique work to which they were appointed: I Cor. 12:4, 8-11, 28, 29.
- (2) He revealed truth to the apostles and prophets which had been hidden from men for ages, and which had not been discovered and could not be discovered by mere human philosophy, or the ordinary processes of reasoning by the natural mind: Eph. 3:2-5.
- (3) He gave revelations to the prophets which were independent of their own thinking: I Pet. 1:10-12.
- (4) He imparted prophetic knowledge to holy men apart from their own volition, and controlled them in giving it utterance: 2 Pet. 1:21.
- (5) He was the real Speaker in all the prophetic utterances: Heb. 3:7 Cf. Psa. 95:7, 8; Heb. 10:15, 16 Cf. Jer. 31:33; Acts 28:25, 26 Cf. Isa. 6:9, 10; see also II Sam. 23:2; Rev. 2:3.
- (6) He gave not only the thought, but the words in which the thought was to be expressed: I Cor. 2:13.
- (7) He has inspired or breathed out the Scriptures in their entirety through the medium of men: II Tim. 3:16; II Pet. 3:15, 16.

2. He is the Interpreter of the Scriptures: Eph. 1:17; John 16:14; I Cor. 2:9-14.

IV The Ministry of the Holy Spirit from Pentecost to the Lord's Return.

1. In Relation to the Church.

- (1) He gave birth to the Church on the day of Pentecost as a body of living members, of which Christ is the risen, exalted, and living Head: Acts 2:1-4; I Cor. 12:12-27; Eph. 1:22, 23.

On the day of Pentecost the coming of the Spirit upon a company of waiting disciples changed them from an aggregation of units into one corporate whole—the Church of the living God.

- (2) He possessed and indwelt the Church as the Temple of God.

By the creation of the Church a new Temple was given to the world, a new Institute for praise, for prayer, and for prophecy. All these functions are fulfilled by the abiding of the Spirit in the Church.

The incense of praise is offered by the inspiration of the Spirit: John 4:24.

The intercession of prayer is maintained by the whole company of those who pray in the Holy Spirit: Jude 20.

The work of the prophecy, in its fullest meaning of forth telling, is carried forward by such as are witnesses in co-operation with the Holy Spirit to the eternal verities of God: John 15:26, 27; Luke 24:48, 49; I Cor. 2:1-5.

- (3) He confers gifts and graces upon the Church for life, fruitfulness, and service.

As the Spirit of life, the Holy Spirit is the Giver of life to the Church, otherwise its members would be "dead in trespasses and sins:" John 6:63; Rom. 8:2.

As the Fruitbearer, He is "God that giveth the increase," "Ye are God's farm," says Paul to the Church at Corinth. Every Christian grace is the fruitage of the Spirit, borne in the soil of surrendered hearts: Gal. 5:22, 23; Rom. 8:23; 5:5; Col. 1:8. All qualification for service is the Spirit's equipment of the members of the Body: Rom. 12:6-8; I Cor. 12:4-11, 28-31.

- (4) He has anointing, illumination, and guidance for the Church: II Cor. 1:21; I John 2:20, 21; II Cor. 1:21.

In Exodus we have a beautiful typical illustration of the anointing which is ours in Christ. At Aaron's consecration the precious ointment was not only poured on his head, but ran down in rich profusion upon his body and upon his priestly garments. This fact is taken up by the Psalmist: Psa. 133:1, 2, "like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments." This is all fulfilled in Christ, our great High Priest, Who has passed through the heavens,—Jesus the Son of God. He also was anointed: Acts 10:38; Luke 4:18, 21; Heb. 1:9. He, the Christos, the Anointed, stands above and for the Christoi, His anointed brethren, and from Him, the Head, the unction of the Holy Ghost descended on the day of Pentecost. It was poured in rich profusion upon His mystical body. It has been flowing down ever since and will continue to do so till the last member shall have been incorporated with Himself, and so anointed by the one Spirit in the one body, which is the Church. Jesus appropriated to Himself the anointing spoken of by the prophets, according to the passage referred to in Luke, and then in two passages in Acts (4:27; 10:38) His personal anointing is mentioned. And as with the Lord, Who is the Head, so with His Body, the anointing has been provided and potentially bestowed, "Now He which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God," (II Cor. 1:21). But there needs to be the recognition and realization of this on the part of the Church,—the appropriation of faith. Hence, the significance of the instruction in I John 2:27.

NOTE—A student of the Scriptures need not be told how closely the ceremony of anointing was related to all important offices and ministries of the servants of Jehovah under the Old Covenant. The priest was anointed that he might be "holy unto the Lord:" Lev. 8:12. The king was anointed that the Spirit of the Lord might rest upon him in power: I Sam. 15:1, 17. The prophet was anointed that he might be the oracle of God to the people: I Kings 19:16. No servant of Jehovah was deemed qualified for his ministry without this. Even in the cleansing of the leper this ceremony was not wanting: Lev. 14:17. If we ask now what this anointing is, the reply is, obviously, the Holy Spirit Himself. As He is the Seal attesting us, so is He the Oil anointing us,—the same Gift described by different symbols. And as it was with Aaron—the first anointed—who was thus qualified to anoint others, so with our great High Priest. It is He within the veil Who gives the Spirit unto His own, that He may qualify them to be "an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession," I Pet. 2:9 R. V.

To sum up the teaching on the anointing, it seems to include three things: consecration, the obtaining or impartation of knowledge, and fitness for service.

- (5) He presides over and directs the Church into the will and plan of God: Acts 13:1-3; 15:28; 20:28; I Cor. 12:8-11.

The Holy Ghost from the day of Pentecost has occupied an entirely new position. The whole administration of the affairs of the Church of Christ has since that day devolved upon Him. That day marked the installation of the Holy Spirit as the Administrator of the Church in all things, which office He is to exercise until Her rapture at the Lord's return. The Holy Spirit, as coming to fill the place of the ascended Christ, has been rightly called the Vicar of Jesus Christ. His oversight extends to the slightest detail in the ordering of God's house, holding all in subjection to the will of the Head, and directing all in harmony with the Divine plan. How clearly this comes out in the passage in I Cor. 12. As in striking a series of concentric circles, there is always one fixed center holding each circumference in defined relation to itself, so here we see all the "diversities of administrations" determined by the one Administrator, the Holy Ghost.

NOTE—Whether the authority of the one ruling, Sovereign Holy Ghost be recognized or ignored, determines whether the Church shall be an anarchy or a unity, a synagogue of lawless ones or the Temple of the living God. Would one desire to find the clue to the great apostasy whose dark eclipse now covers two-thirds of nominal Christendom, here it is—the rule and authority of the Holy Ghost ignored in the Church; the servants of the house assuming mastery and then encroaching more and more on the prerogatives of the Head till at last one man sets himself up as the "Vicar of Jesus Christ." There is but one "Holy See" upon earth, i. e., the seat of the Holy One in the Church, which only the Spirit of God can occupy without the most daring blasphemy, (See II Cor. 3:16-18, Weymouth Trans.).

Beside the general statement of the administration of the Holy Spirit, let us note the particular acts and offices in which this authority is exercised.

A. The Holy Spirit has supervision over the government of the Church: Acts 20:28; Eph. 4:8-12, R. V.

It is clearly taught that in the early history of the Church, bishops or pastors were governed by the Spirit of God, and not by the suffrages of the people. The office and its incumbent were alike by Divine appointment. The ascent of the Lord and the descent of the Spirit are here exhibited in their necessary relation. In the one event, Christ took His seat in heaven as "Head over all things to the Church;" in the other, the Holy Ghost came down to "build up the Body of Christ." Of course, it is the Head Who directs the construction of the Body, as being "fitly framed together, it groweth into an holy temple in the Lord." And it is the Holy Ghost who superintends the construction, since we are builded together for "an habitation of God in the Spirit." Therefore, all the offices through which this work is to be carried on, were appointed by Christ, and instituted through the Spirit Whom He sent down.

B. It is the prerogative of the Holy Spirit to direct in the worship and service of the Church their every phase. Notice the various parts of the service and their relation to the Divine Administrator.

- a. Preaching gets its inspiration, effectuality, and authority from the Holy Spirit: I Pet. 1:12; I Cor. 2:1-5; I Thess. 1:5, 6; Acts 10:44.
- b. Prayer is dependent for its acceptableness and achievement upon the power and guidance of the Holy Spirit: Jude 20; Eph. 2:18; 6:18; Rom. 8:26, 27; see also Matt. 18:19.

- c. The service of song should be in the Spirit's fullness and power: Eph. 5:8, 19; Col. 3:16; Heb. 13:15; I Cor. 14:15.
- d. He is the Spirit of Missions, i. e., the Superintendent and Energizer thereof: Acts 1:8; 16:8.
In the simple story of primitive missions, we see how every step in the enterprise was originated and directed by the presiding Spirit.
 - (a) In the selection of missionaries: Acts 13:2.
 - (b) In sending them out into the fields: Acts 13:4.
 - (c) In empowering them to speak: Acts 13:9.
 - (d) In sustaining them under persecution: Acts 13:50-52.
 - (e) In setting the Divine seal upon their ministry among the Gentiles: Acts 15:8
 - (f) In counseling them concerning difficult questions of missionary policy: Acts 15:28.
 - (g) In restraining them from entering into fields not yet appointed by the Lord: Acts 16:6, 7.

- (6) He completes the Church, the Body of Christ, by calling out a people for the name of Christ: Acts 15:14-18.

NOTE—The Church, "which is His Body" began its history and development at Pentecost. An Ecclesia, an outgathering, was to be made to constitute the mystical body of Christ, incorporated into Him, the Head, and indwelt by Him through the Holy Ghost. The Church is formed from within; Christ, present by the Holy Spirit, regenerating men by the sovereign action of the Spirit and organizing them into Himself as the Divine Center. The Head and the Body are therefore one, and predestined to the same history of humiliation and glory. And as they are one in fact, so are they one in name. He Whom God anointed and filled with the Holy Ghost is called "The Christ;" and the Church, which is His body and fullness, is also called "The Christ;" I Cor. 12:12. Christ is thus both in heaven and on earth: as He is called "The Head of the Church" He is in heaven; but in respect to His Body, which is called "Christ" he is on earth. As soon as the Holy Ghost was sent down from heaven, this great work of embodying began and is to continue until the number of the elect shall be gathered and the body be completed: Acts 2:41; 5:14; 11:24; Eph. 4:11-16; I Cor. 12:13; Col. 1:18; 2:19; Eph. 5:30.

2. In Relation to the World.

The Spirit strives with men as a Spirit of conviction, of reasoning, moving them in patience to the way of God. This is the first aspect of the ministry of the Spirit among men. He came not merely to reveal "the things of Christ" to the Church, but to convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment.

In the Authorized Version the word "convict" is rendered "reprove." It is a word, the inner thought of which is not revealed by the translation "convict." Bishop Westcott in his exposition of the Gospel of John, says that this word has in it four shades of meaning:

First, an authoritative examination of the facts; second, unquestionable proof; third, decisive judgment; and last, punitive power.

The mission of the Holy Spirit with men is that of revealing to them the truth on these subjects in such a way that they shall be convinced that it is the truth. Concerning sin, men seek to excuse themselves, try to evade the facts; but when the Spirit deals with a man about sin, he cannot escape; and under His illumination man has the same clear vision of righteousness and judgment. It is clear that these three words cover the past, the present, and the future of the outlook of man as a sinner—the history of past sin, the present demand for righteousness, and the fear of future judgment. The Spirit takes these three cardinal facts, and places them in their true light, so that men may make no mistake concerning them. The Master declared the testimony the Spirit would bear on these subjects. "Of sin, because they believe not on Me; of righteousness, because I go to the Father, and ye behold Me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world hath been judged." I John 16:9-11. That is the three-fold revelation which the Spirit is giving to the world today, and it demands a closer examination.

Three persons are spoken of: Man, Christ, and Satan—Man in the realm of sin, Christ in the realm of righteousness, Satan in the realm of judgment. Observe next the interrelation of these three: Man in his relationship to himself, to Christ, and to Satan; Christ in His relationship to Himself, to man, and to Satan; Satan in his relationship to himself, to man, and to Christ.

First, Man in his relationship to the three. Man's relationship to himself is that of a sinner having lost his life, whose sin ceases and is put away when he believes in Jesus. Man's relationship to Christ is that of a sinner for whom He has procured salvation, and through Whose triumph of righteousness man may himself do righteously. Man's relationship to Satan is that of a slave under the prince of this world, but from whose power he is set free, for this prince has been defeated.

Secondly, Christ in His relationship to the three. Christ's relationship to Himself is that of righteousness, for He declared His personal triumph when He said: "I go to the Father," John 16:17. His relationship to man is that of a Saviour, and therefore man's sin consists in refusal to believe on Him. Christ's relationship to Satan is that of Conqueror, for "the prince of this world hath been judged," John 16:11.

Lastly, Satan in his relation to the three. Satan, concerning himself, is conquered—"hath been judged"—and is powerless; concerning man, is conquered—"hath been judged"—and therefore even he must own Him King. There is no other outlook for evil than that of conquest.

Once again: "He, when He is come, will convict the world in respect of sin.....because they believe not on me." John 16:8, 9. With the coming of the Spirit upon all flesh, sin had a new centre. Henceforth sin consists in the refusal to accept the Divine provision of healing and power. No longer is the root-sin that of impurity, or drunkenness, or lust, or pride, or even law-breaking; the root-sin is the refusal to believe on Jesus. If men will believe on Him, in that relationship to Christ which springs from belief, is to be found healing for wounds, and strength which issues in victory. The Spirit declares that the sin lies, not in the fact of passion, but in the refusal to let the Master master the passion.

The Spirit has also come to reveal the truth about righteousness. If the revelation of sin be that of a new centre, the revelation of righteousness is, consequently, that of a new possibility. "Of righteousness, because I go to the Father." John 16:10. In the height of that glory, which mortal eyes may by no means look upon, is God's perfect Man, the One Who said, "I go to the Father." Not simply by virtue of His own righteousness did He go, but bearing into the presence of the Father the marks of the death on the Cross, by which He liberated His life, that it might become the force of renewal for man. The Spirit comes to bring to men the gospel of a new possibility of righteousness.

Lastly, the Spirit's revelation of judgment is concerned with a new exercise thereof. A common mistake, in quoting this passage, is that of adding the words "to come" after "judgment." The confusion of thought which this reveals is obvious; for the judgment here referred to is not that which is to come, but that which is already accomplished. The Judgment Day is not to be of twenty-four hours, but of long duration, an age in itself, of which the closing event will be the final assize before the Great White Throne. That stupendous transaction will simply be the unfolding of the facts which are present today, because the prince of this world hath been judged. Righteousness has had its conflict with evil, and has won in the fight. The head of the enemy of the race has been bruised, even though the heel of the Victor was wounded in the process. "The prince of this world hath been judged;" and the things that must pass and perish are evil things and unrighteous things, while the things that cannot be shaken and that will remain are righteous things, pure things, and beautiful things, yea all the things of God. Judgment is fixed, doom is marked, destiny is sealed, by the Cross of Jesus Christ. If men fling in their lot with the things which are doomed and judged, then they must share the doom and judgment which have been passed upon them by the Cross of Calvary; but if they turn their backs upon doomed things, and lift their eyes toward the things that abide, the heavenly things where Christ is, the upper things, the conquering things, then for them judgment was borne upon the Cross, and they have entered into justification-life. Thus the ministry of the Spirit in the world today is that of revealing the truth concerning sin, righteousness, and judgment.

3. In Relation to the Believer.

As the ground under this division has been practically covered by the consideration given to the work of the Holy Spirit in relation to the Church, we shall only give a brief summary under this heading.

- (1) The Holy Spirit makes anew, quickens or regenerates the believer: John 3:3-5; Titus 3:5; II Cor. 3:6.
- (2) The Holy Spirit takes up His abode in the body of every regenerate believer; it becomes His temple: I Cor. 3:16; 6:19; Rom. 8:9.
- (3) The Holy Spirit seals the believer unto the day of redemption: Eph. 1:13, 14; 4:30.
- (4) The Holy Spirit infills the believer: Acts 2:4; Eph. 5:18.
- (5) The Holy Spirit provisionally emancipates the believer from a life of bondage in sin to a life of freedom in righteousness: Rom. 8:2, 12, 13; Gal. 5:17, 22, 23.
- (6) The Holy Spirit guides the believer in his walk of life and sphere of service: Rom. 8:14; Gal. 5:16, 25; Acts 8:27-29; Acts 13:2-4; 16:6, 7.
- (7) The Holy Spirit anoints the believer to give spiritual discernment in the understanding of the Word of God and to impart spiritual power to do the work of God: I John 2:20, 27 Cf. I Cor. 2:9-14; John 14:26; 16:13; Luke 4:18 Cf. Acts 10:38,

STUDY QUESTIONS ON PNEUMATOLOGY

1. What difficulty does the doctrine of the personality of the Holy Spirit introduce?
2. What false assumption is the argument based upon that God cannot at one and the same time be a Person and Infinite, and why is it false?
3. In building up a conception of the Divine personality from the suggestion given in man, what must be remembered?
4. What was the Socinian teaching concerning the Holy Spirit and with whom did it originate?
5. What was the effect of the Socinian conception of the Holy Spirit upon the church and what furnishes us with a striking illustration of this?
6. What indication have we had of the revival of the truth of the personality of the Holy Spirit?
7. What designations proper to personality only are given to the Holy Spirit? Give references.
8. Give the connections in which the name of the Holy Spirit is mentioned which imply personality and quote one passage with one of them.
9. Mention some of the acts performed by the Holy Spirit proving personality and quote one passage with one of them.
10. Give some of the ways in which the Holy Spirit is affected as a person by the acts of others and quote one passage with one of them.
11. Give proofs showing that the ascription to the Holy Spirit of a personal subsistence, distinct from that of the Father and the Son cannot be explained as personification, and quote one passage with each.
12. What was the Arian teaching concerning the Holy Spirit and how did it differ from that of the Socinian?
13. Quote one passage in which the Holy Spirit is spoken of as God.
14. Give the divine attributes ascribed to the Holy Spirit, with references.
15. Give the divine works ascribed to the Holy Spirit, with references.
16. Give three instances in which the name of the Holy Spirit is coupled in equality with that of God and of Christ.
17. What proof does Christian experience offer concerning the Holy Spirit and how?
18. In taking up the work of the Holy Spirit what popular misconception needs to be removed?
19. What do the Scriptures teach concerning the part taken in the works of God by each person of the Trinity and what seems to be the distinctive part of each?
20. What perhaps is the explanation of the neglect of thought concerning the Holy Spirit's relation to creation?
21. What may be said concerning the origin and preservation of everything in nature?
22. In general what is the special work of the Holy Spirit in creation?

23. What aspect of this work is designated in Gen. 1:2?
24. Concerning what does the Holy Spirit act as Administrator and how is it expressed?
25. Give the second aspect of the Holy Spirit's relation to creation and quote one passage proving it.
26. What striking difference is to be noted between the work of the Spirit in Gen. 1:2 and Psa. 33:6?
27. What is the third aspect of the Holy Spirit's work in relation to nature? Quote one passage proving it.
28. Describe the work of the Spirit in relation to animal and vegetable life or the cosmos which He has produced.
29. Of what is the second account of man's creation an unfolding, and what is thus shown concerning man?
30. What part of man was produced by the inbreathing of God and what three-fold relationship was he thus fitted to enter?
31. What was man's relation to the Spirit prior to the Fall and what was the effect of the Fall upon this relation?
32. What were the characteristics of the Spirit's ministry after the Fall?
33. How is the difference of the work of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament and New Testament dispensations commonly expressed and why will it not always hold true?
34. What perhaps is the best point of approach to the subject of the difference of the work of the Spirit in the two dispensations and why?
35. What other distinction should be made with reference to the Spirit's work in the two dispensations?
36. Give a four-fold classification of the work of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament dispensation with a Scriptural illustration with each.
37. Give the various phases of the Holy Spirit's work during the Messianic Period and quote one passage with one of them.
38. Give the seven-fold work of the Holy Spirit to be the Author of the Scriptures.
39. Quote one passage which shows the Holy Spirit to be the Interpreter of the Scriptures.
40. What was the first aspect of the Holy Spirit's work in relation to the church?
41. By the creation of the Church what was given to the world and how is its three-fold function fulfilled?
42. What does the Holy Spirit confer upon the Church and for what purpose? Quote one passage as an illustration.
43. How is the typical anointing of Aaron fulfilled in Christ for us and what should be our attitude towards it?
44. How is the importance of the anointing shown in the Old Testament and what does it seem to include?

45. Since the day of Pentecost, what new position does the Holy Spirit occupy in relation to the Church and by what name has He been rightly called?
46. What does the recognition of the Holy Spirit's authority or the lack of such recognition determine?
47. What is the Holy Spirit's administrative work in relation to the government of the Church? Quote one passage showing it.
48. Give the four-fold work of the Holy Spirit in relation to the worship and service of the Church. Quote one passage with each.
49. Show how every step of the missionary enterprise in the early Church was originated and directed by the presiding Spirit.
50. What has the Holy Spirit to do with the formation of the Church?
51. Give a summary of the work of the Holy Spirit in relation to the believer, quoting one passage of Scripture with one phase of this work.

CHAPTER FIVE

ANTHROPOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF MAN

- A. THE ORIGIN OF MAN.
- B. THE UNITY OF THE HUMAN RACE.
- C. THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF MAN,
- D. THE ORIGINAL STATE OF MAN.
- E. THE MORAL NATURE OF MAN.
- F. THE ENDLESS EXISTENCE OF MAN,
- G. THE PROBATION OF MAN.
- H. THE TEMPTATION OF MAN,
- I. THE FALL OF MAN.

A. The Origin of Man.

I Negatively.

1. Not by Abiogenesis or Spontaneous Generation.

The Scriptural doctrine of the origin of man is opposed to that held by many of the ancients, that man is a spontaneous production of the earth. The earth was assumed to be pregnant with the germs of all living organisms, which were quickened under favorable circumstances; or it was regarded as instinct with a productive life, to which is to be referred the origin of all the plants and animals living on its surface.

It is also opposed to the more modern view of Abiogenesis, that life is the product of physical causes: that all that is requisite for its production is to bring together the necessary conditions.

NOTE—For two hundred years the scientific world has been rent with discussions upon the origin of life. Two great schools have defended exactly opposite views—one, that matter can spontaneously generate life; the other, that life can only come from pre-existing life. The doctrine of Spontaneous Generation, as the first is called, has been revived within recent years by Dr. Bastian, after a series of elaborate experiments on the Beginnings of Life. Stated in his own words, his conclusion is this: "Both observation and experiment unmistakably testify to the fact that living matter is constantly being formed de novo, in obedience to the same laws and tendencies which determine all the more simple chemical combinations." Life, that is to say, is not the Gift of Life. It is capable of springing into being of itself. It can be spontaneously generated.

This announcement called into the field a phalanx of observers, and the highest authorities in biological science engaged themselves afresh upon the problem. The experiments necessary to test the matter can be followed or repeated by any one possessing the slightest manipulative skill. Glass vessels are three-parts filled with infusions of hay or any organic matter. They are boiled to kill all germs of life, and hermetically sealed to exclude the outer air. The air inside, having been exposed to the boiling temperature for many hours, is supposed to be likewise dead; so that any life which may subsequently appear in the closed flasks must have sprung into being of itself. In Bastian's experiments, after every expedient to secure sterility, life did appear inside in myriad quantity. Therefore, he argued, it was spontaneously generated.

But the phalanx of observers found two errors in this calculation. Professor Tyndall repeated the same experiment, only with a precaution to ensure absolute sterility suggested by the most recent science—a discovery of his own. After every care, he conceived there might still be undestroyed germs in the air inside the flasks. If the air were absolutely germless and pure would the myriad-life appear? He manipulated his experimental vessels in an atmosphere which under the high test of optical purity—the most delicate known test—was absolutely germless. Here not a vestige of life appeared. He varied the experiment in every direction, but matter in the germless air never yielded life.

The other error was detected by Mr. Dallinger. He found among the lower forms of life the most surprising and indestructible vitality. Many animals could survive much higher temperatures than Dr. Bastian had applied to annihilate them. Some germs almost refused to be annihilated—they were all but fireproof.

These experiments have practically closed the question. A decided and authoritative conclusion has now taken its place in science. So far as science can settle anything, this question is settled. The attempt to get the living out of the dead has failed. Spontaneous Generation has had to be given up. And it is now recognized on every hand that Life can only come from the touch of Life. Huxley categorically announces that the doctrine of Biogenesis, or life only from life, is "victorious along the whole line at the present day." And even whilst confessing that he wishes the evidence were the other way, Tyndall is compelled to say, "I affirm that no shred of trustworthy experimental testimony exists to prove that life in our day has ever appeared independently of antecedent life."

2. Not by Evolution or Natural Development.

Evolution is a philosophical and speculative theory of recent origin whereby it is sought to account for the various elements and compounds of the inorganic world (Cosmic Evolution), and also for the countless species in the organic world (Organic Evolution).

By the "inorganic world" is meant the elements and compounds as minerals and gases which are without life; and by the "organic world" is meant organisms (plants and animals) which have life. Although sometimes spoken of as a scientific theory, Evolution is not scientific; for science has to do only with facts. Evolution belongs wholly in the realm of speculative philosophy. The basic assumption of this theory is that all things in nature—living and not-living—have a common origin; and that all the diverse elements, compounds, and organisms were developed by the cumulative effect of changes in themselves imperceptibly small, all of which changes were brought about by the energy of "forces resident in nature."

The theory assumes the existence of matter and force, without attempting to account for the origin of either. Matter is supposed to have existed originally in a perfectly simple and undifferentiated condition. Its form is supposed to have been that of an exceedingly tenuous highly heated mist or vapor, filling all space. Force is also assumed to have been exceedingly simple at the first, being nothing more than a tendency on the part of the entire mass of undifferentiated matter to keep in motion. As to where matter and force, and the tremendous uniform heat, necessary to keep matter in a gaseous state came from, the theory is silent.

As we trace in imagination the supposed course of Evolution from its assumed beginning in undifferentiated matter, onward and upward, to the infinite diversities of the organic kingdom, we not only encounter difficulties at every step and in connection with every detail, but we also find certain gaps deep and wide for which evolutionists themselves can offer no definite explanation.

NOTE—The first and greatest gap which confronts the evolutionist is that between the living and the not-living. The entire world of living creatures is assumed to have emerged, sometime and somehow, and through "resident forces," out of the inorganic realm. Yet no trace of this marvelous process remains, and the inorganic world exhibits no progressiveness at all, no power or disposition to advance one hair's breadth.

The next gap is that between the vegetable and animal kingdoms. If the latter, in its entirety, arose out of the former through gradual and infinitesimal changes, no trace of that marvelous development remains; nor can there be found in the vegetable kingdom anything from which the characteristic features of animal life could be evolved.

Next, we encounter the great gap between the vertebrates and the invertebrates; then that between the mammals and other vertebrates; then the gaps between each of the two million or so of distinct species of organisms and every other; and finally the immense gap between Man and the highest of the brutes.

In considering these great gaps, and the many lesser ones, it should be borne in mind that Evolution is set forth expressly as a theory of origins, that is to say, as an explanation of how all the infinite varieties of things, living and not-living, came into existence. But origins, including those of the very broadest kind, are just what the theory conspicuously fails to explain. Thus to begin with, the evolutionist makes no pretence that his theory can explain the origin of either Matter or Force. The existence of these he must take for granted, and attribute them to an Unknowable First Cause.

Going on further, we come to creatures having that mysterious thing called "Life." Does Evolution account for the origin of that? Quite the contrary; Darwin himself declared that spontaneous generation is "absolutely inconceivable." His co-discoverer, Alfred Russel Wallace, says that "the very first vegetable cell must have possessed altogether new powers," and he adds, "Here we have indications of a new power at work." Huxley admits that there is no evidence of any link between the living and the not-living; and other leading evolutionists could be quoted to the same effect. So, just where an explanation of the origin of a new and extraordinary thing is needed, Evolution—that great theory of origins—completely breaks down.

Matter and force do not account for the origin of life. Therefore, Darwin had to accept the truth of divine fiat to explain it. He seems, in accepting this truth, to seek, by the use of fine language, to disguise the fact that it is fatal to his theory. Note his words: "There is a grandeur in this view of Life, with its several powers, having been originally breathed by the Creator into the first forms or into one." If so, then is there not the same "grandeur" in the view of the direct action of the Creator in the origin of every substance and species? Mr. Darwin admits (because he must) that there is nothing "unscientific" in assuming the direct intervention of the Creator in originating the first living forms; and if so, there is nothing unscientific in assuming His intervention to create all living species.

Going still further, we come to the Animal Kingdom, whose species have powers (as locomotion, feelings, etc.) not possessed by the vegetable. What has Evolution to say as to the origin of that? Not a word. Here again Mr. Wallace admits that the advance from the vegetable to the animal kingdom is "completely beyond all possibility of explanation by Matter, its laws and forces. It is the introduction of sensation or consciousness, constituting the fundamental distinction between the animal and vegetable kingdoms."

Thus, in respect to the origins of the major divisions of nature, the theory of Evolution is a confessed failure. It cannot even pretend to account for them. We would at this point ask, what is the value of, and what credence should be given to, a Theory of Origins which admittedly is unable to account for the origin of Matter, Force, Life, the Animal Kingdom, and the Species?

Passing on, we come to the Vertebrates, that is to say, that large and superior order of living creatures which have a back-bone. Does Evolution give us any explanation of that? None whatever. While the difference between the vertebrates and invertebrates is not so conspicuous and notable as that between the living and not-living, or that between the vegetable and animal kingdom, yet Evolution is just as impotent to explain the one as the other. There is not the slightest evidence to show that creatures having no back-bone "evolved" the many species of vertebrates, nor is there even a plausible suggestion as to how such a thing could be brought to pass.

Looking further, we come to the large and important class of Mammals, that is to say, species whereof the female imparts nourishment to its young from the breast. Certain species of vertebrates—the birds, reptiles and fishes—have not this peculiarity, nor anything approaching it. These, however, are far inferior to those creatures which have the nourishing breast. So we ask again the question: Does Evolution account for it? And again the answer must be in the negative. There is no connecting link between the two classes; nor are there any groups of non-mammals that are reaching out to enter the great class of Mammalia.

We would at this point dispose of an unwarranted inference which is often urged (in the total absence of proofs) in support of the theory of Evolution. That inference is that because there are many species which have features in common—as back-bones and nourishing breasts—those species must have had a common origin. That is to say, resemblances are supposed to point to an ancestor common to all. But the inference is without warrant. Such resemblances are just as consistent with the dogma of Creation as with the theory of Evolution. Resemblances are to be expected in the works of an all-wise Creator. For when He has devised a contrivance, as a back-bone, to serve a certain purpose, He would inevitably use the same device in whatever place that purpose was to be served, with only such modifications and adaptations as the varying needs of individual species might require.

We need not continue any further, for our present purpose, our general survey of the field of the organic kingdoms of nature. We deem it sufficient under this heading to say that, in not one of these orders and species, and in not one of the countless billions of organisms comprised in them, has there ever been seen the slightest tendency to advance, or to depart from its type. On the contrary, there is found in every living creature the most stubborn and unconquerable determination not to evolve. The whole universe, therefore, and every member of it, is a witness against Evolution.

Furthermore, if Evolution were the law of progress of the universe, it is manifest that there would be no species or other lines of division. There would be only individual forms, shading imperceptibly one into another, each in the process of becoming something else, so that classification would be an impossibility. The world that lies before us, composed of clearly marked divisions, orders, classes, species, all sharply defined and separated one from another by impassable barriers, is just the opposite of such a world as the supposed law of Evolution would produce. We can, therefore, summon heaven and earth, land and sea, and all the hosts of them to bear witness, that Evolution is a myth.

The matter of the permanence of species deserves special consideration. It is admitted on all hands that there is no Evolution in the individual organism—but that the contrary rule holds everywhere. For the individual comes into being suddenly, matures quickly, reproduces, and suddenly ceases to be. The evolutionist, however, claims that it is the species, not the individual organism, that has come into existence through Evolution. The species, says he, is governed by the "law" of Evolution, though (strange to say) the individuals which compose the species are exempt from it.

There is, however, a serious and obvious flaw in the logic which would distinguish thus between the individual, and the species to which it belongs; for the species cannot exist apart from the individuals composing it, any more than a river can exist apart from its water. The species is merely an abstraction; and there is obviously no way a species can evolve, except by the evolving of all the individuals composing it. Strictly speaking, and for the purposes of a discussion like this, "species" do not exist. What exist in nature are simply innumerable individuals each having its own life. Individuals which have life of the same sort are said to constitute a "species."

Therefore, evolutionary changes, if they take place at all, must needs begin and continue in individuals.

It follows that, if there be no inherent tendency in individual organisms to depart from their ancestral types, there could not be any development of new species. If, on the other hand, the immense number of existing species did come into their present state of being through evolutionary changes, effected by resident forces (as distinguished from the act of a Creator from without) then we should find no distinct species of plants and animals, but a very different state of things; for, instead of definite and persistent types, we should have a confusion of nondescript individuals, each in process of becoming something different from what its ancestors were.

Evolution assumes that all things in the organic world are endowed with two opposite and mutually antagonistic tendencies, first a tendency to depart from its ancestral type under the influence of changes in "environment," and second, a tendency to hold tightly all its peculiarities, and to transmit them to its offspring. These two tendencies could not exist in the same creatures. The former is purely imaginary. It is contrary to all the observed facts of nature. For, so far from there being any tendency on the part of individuals to depart from the ancestral type, and so far from there being any evidence of "resident forces" in them, impelling them to do so, the fact is—always and everywhere—that individual organisms evince a most stubborn tendency to cling to the ancestral type, despite all influence to the contrary.

This important fact can be stated very strongly; for scientific men, like Luther Burbank, have sought by every conceivable means to develop new species. But, notwithstanding some remarkable results in the way of "varieties," it has been found (1) that the barrier of species cannot be crossed, (2) that every "variety" produced artificially, if left to itself for a few generations, reverts to the original type. In a word, what we find in each and all the thousands of species of living creatures is perfect obedience to the primal law of their being, given to them by their Creator when He said, "Let the earth bring forth grass and herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind . . . and the living creature, after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth, after his kind; and it was so" (Gen. 1:11, 24). It was "so" then; and beyond all question it is "so" now.

Here we see that Evolution comes into direct collision both with the facts of nature and with the statements of the Word of God.

A "species" may embrace many distinct "varieties," and man has indeed been able to produce artificially many varieties of existing species. But it is always necessary to maintain by artificial means the modifications thus produced, else the individuals speedily revert to the original ancestral condition. Thus, upon consideration of these modifications of type, it is found that, so far from lending any support to the theory of Evolution, they furnish a strong argument against it. For it is essential to that theory that modifications, when of advantage to the possessor, should become fixed in the family, and be carried forward to all succeeding generations. But what we find in actual experience is just the reverse.

Moreover, while varieties without number can be easily produced, it has been found impossible, even in a single instance, to cross the line of species. Thus, we see many varieties of dog. The canine species includes the shaggy St. Bernard, and the diminutive smooth skinned terrier. But in every case it is a dog, and is recognized by his fellow dogs as such. No amount of breeding, or cross-breeding, could ever make him anything but a dog.

II Positively.

The Scriptures clearly and distinctly teach that the origin of man lies in the special, immediate creative and formative acts of God: Gen. 1:27; 2:7.

NOTE—Attention is called to the use of the Hebrew verb for create (bara) in Gen. 1:27, showing the absolute separation of mankind from the animal kingdom. Says Dr. Strong, "If bara does not signify absolute creation, no word exists in the Hebrew language that can express this idea." There is no foundation in Scripture or science for the belief that the body of man, much less his moral and mental nature, is the result of evolution from lower forms of life. Dr. Strong also declares, "No single instance has yet been adduced of the transformation of one animal species into another, either by natural or artificial selection; much less has it been demonstrated that the body of the brute has ever been developed into that of man. All evolution implies progress and reinforcement of life, and is intelligible only as the immanent God gives new impulses to the process. Apart from the direct agency of God the view that man's physical system is descended by natural generation from some ancestral simian form can be regarded only as an irrational hypothesis. Since the soul and spirit, then, are produced through the immediate creation of God, and the creation of man's body is mentioned by the Scripture writer in direct connection with this creation of the spirit and soul, man's body was in this sense an immediate creation also."

B. The Unity of the Human Race.

There is still another question which science has forced on theology, in relation to man, which cannot be overlooked. Have all mankind had a common origin? and have they a common nature? Are they all descended from one pair, and do they constitute one species? These questions are answered affirmatively in the Bible. The Scriptural doctrine concerning man is, that the race is not only the same in kind but the same in origin: Gen. 2:7; Chs. 5, 10; Acts 17:26.

NOTE—There are two points involved in this question: community of origin, and unity of species. All plants and animals derived by propagation from the same original stock are of the same species; but those of the same species need not be derived from a common stock. If God saw fit at the beginning, or at any time since, to create plants or animals of the same kind in large numbers and in different parts of the earth, they would be of the same species (or kind) though not of the same origin. The oaks of America and those of Europe are identical in species, even although not derived from one and the same parent oak. It may be admitted that the great majority of plants and animals were originally produced not singly or in pairs, but in groups, the earth bringing forth a multitude of individuals of the same kind. It is, therefore, in itself, possible that all men may be of the same species, although not all descended from Adam. And such has been the opinion of some distinguished naturalists.

I Arguments from Scripture.

The Scriptures teach that the whole human race is descended from a single pair: Gen. 1:27, 28; 2:7, 22; 3:20; 9:19.

1. This truth is the basis of Paul's doctrine of the organic unity of mankind in the first transgression and of the provision for salvation for the race in Christ: Rom. 5:12, 19; I Cor. 15:21, 22; Heb. 2:16.
2. This truth also constitutes the ground of man's obligation of natural brotherhood to every member of the race: Acts 17:26, R. V.; Heb. 2:11 (word to be supplied probably "Father" or "body").

II Extra Scriptural Arguments.

The teaching of Scripture is re-enforced by History and Science in the following particulars:

1. The Argument from History.

So far as the history of nations and tribes in both hemispheres is concerned, it points to a common origin in Central Asia. The European nations are acknowledged to have come in successive waves of emigration from Asia. Modern ethnologists practically agree in saying that the American Indians came from Eastern Asia, perhaps by way of the Aleutian Islands.

2. The Argument from Language.

Comparative philology points to a common origin of all the more important languages, and there is no evidence that the less important are not also so derived.

3. The Argument from Psychology.

The existence among all families of mankind of common mental and moral characteristics is most easily explained in the theory of a common origin. It is probable that certain myths common to many nations were handed down from a time when the families of earth had not yet separated. Among these are the accounts of the making of the world and man, a primeval garden, innocence, a serpent, a tree of knowledge, a temptation and fall, a flood, sacrifice, etc.

4. The Argument from Physiology.

All races are fruitful one with another. The normal temperature of the body is the same. The mean frequency of the pulse is the same. There is liability to the same diseases.

These facts are not true of other animals; and again, human blood can be distinguished by the microscope from that of any other animal.

C. The Essential Elements of Man.

I. General Statement.

The Scriptures clearly and distinctly teach that man as constituted by creation has a material nature and an immaterial nature. The immaterial nature consists of his soul and spirit. This is proved by:

1. The record of man's creation: Gen. 2:7.

2. Passages in which the human soul or spirit is distinguished, on the one hand, from the divine spirit, and on the other hand, from the body, which it inhabits: Num. 16:22; I Cor. 2:11; Heb. 12:9; Gen. 35:18; I Kings 17:21; Eccles. 12:7; James 2:26.

3. The mention of the body and soul (or spirit) as together constituting the whole man: Matt. 10:28; I Cor. 5:3; III John 2.

NOTE—The detailed account of the creation of man which now presents itself for our consideration is a subject of the deepest interest; for it forms the only possible basis of true doctrine in regard to the origin and nature of our race. We must, therefore, carefully examine it; but the labor will not be tedious, for the whole revelation is contained in the following brief record:—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7). We have thus three points to consider; the formation of the body, the infusion of the breath of life, and the result that man awoke to consciousness a living soul.

First, then, we are told that the Lord God formed man, that is, moulded his bodily shape as the potter does the clay. Indeed the meaning of the Hebrew verb is so decided that its present participle, used as a substantive, is the ordinary word for a potter. To this first act of God Job refers when he says, "Remember, I beseech Thee, that Thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt Thou bring me into dust again?" (Job 10:9); for the material moulded was the dust of the ground which had just been moistened by a mist: and hence it is afterwards said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19).

The word translated "ground" is adamah, which properly means red earth, and from which the name Adam seems to be derived. This corresponds to the natural color of human skin, which is red on white, and in accordance with which Solomon's description of ideal beauty begins with the words, "My beloved is white and ruddy" (Cant. 5:10).

The spirit of man had nothing to do with the formation of its sheath. God first moulded the senseless frame, and then breathed into it "the breath of lives;" for the original of the last word is in the plural. We have not, however, previously noticed this, because it may be nothing more than the well-known Hebrew plural of excellence: the word, which is the common term for life, is rarely found in the singular. But if we wish to give significance to the number, it may refer to the fact that the inbreathing of God produced a two-fold life, sensual and spiritual, the distinct existence of each part of which we may often detect within ourselves by their antagonism.

This breath of lives became the spirit of man, the principle of life within him—for, as the Lord tells us, "It is the spirit that quickeneth"—and by the manner of its introduction we are taught that it was a direct impartation from the Creator. We must, of course, carefully avoid confusing it with the Spirit of God, from Whom the Scriptures plainly distinguish it, and Who is represented as bearing witness with our spirit (Rom. 8:16). But, as we are told in the Book of Proverbs (20:27), it is the candle of the Lord, capable of being lighted by His Spirit, and given by Him as a means whereby man may search into the chambers of his heart and know himself.

Man was thus made up of only two independent elements, the corporeal and the spiritual; but when God placed the spirit within the casing of earth, the combination of these produced a third part, and man became a living soul. For direct communication between spirit and flesh is impossible: their intercourse can be carried on only by means of a medium, and the instant production of one was the result of their contact in Adam.

He became a living soul in the sense that spirit and body were completely merged in this third part; so that in his unfallen state he knew nothing of those ceaseless strivings of spirit and flesh which are matters of daily experience to us. There was a perfect blending of his three natures into one, and the soul as the uniting medium became the cause of his individuality, of his existence as a distinct being. It was also to serve the spirit as a covering, and as a means of using the body; nor does Tertullian seem to have erred when he affirmed that the flesh is the body of the soul, the soul that of the spirit.

But it is interesting to notice that, while the soul is the meeting-point of the elements of our being in this present life, the spirit will be the ruling power in our resurrection state. For the first man Adam was made a living soul, but the last Adam a quickening Spirit (1 Cor. 15:45); and that which is sown a psychic body is raised a spiritual body (1 Cor. 15:44).

Thus in the very beginning of Scripture we are warned against the popular phraseology of soul and body, which has long sustained an erroneous belief that man consists of but two parts.

There are one or two passages in which a reference to the three-fold composition of our being cannot be denied or refuted. Such is the very remarkable verse in the Epistle to the Hebrews;—"For the Word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12). Here Paul plainly speaks of the immaterial part of man as consisting of two separable elements, soul and spirit; while he describes the material portion as made up of joints and marrow, organs of motion and sensation. Hence, he claims for the Word of God the power of separating, and, as it were, taking to pieces the whole being of man, spiritual, psychic, and corporeal, even as the priest flayed and divided limb from limb the animal for the burnt offering, in order to lay bare every part, and discover if there were any hidden spot or blemish.

Another obvious passage is the well-known intercession of Paul for the Thessalonians;—"And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess 5:23).

Now the body, we may term the sense-consciousness; the soul, the self-consciousness; and the spirit, the God-consciousness. For the body gives us the use of the five senses; the soul comprises the intellect which aids us in the present state of existence, and the emotions which proceed from the senses; while the spirit is our noblest part, which came directly from God, and by which alone we are able to apprehend and worship Him.

This last, as we remarked above, can only act upon the body through the medium of the soul; and we have a good illustration of the fact in the words of Mary;—"My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour" (Luke 1:46, 47). Here the change in tense shows that the spirit first conceived joy in God, and then, communicating with the soul, roused it to give expression to the feeling by means of the bodily organs.

II The Origin of the Soul since the Original Creation.

Three theories with regard to this subject have been held, the last of which we deem to be in harmony with the teaching of Scripture.

1. The Theory of Pre-existence.

This theory was adopted in ancient times to explain the soul's possession of ideas not derived from sense, to account for its imprisonment in the body, and to justify the disparity of conditions in which men enter the world. It has been advocated by later theologians upon the ground that the inborn depravity of the human will can be explained only by supposing a personal act of self-determination in a previous, or timeless, state of being.

(1) Objections to the theory of the soul having existed prior to birth.

a. If the soul in this pre-existent state was conscious and personal, it is inexplicable that we should have no remembrance of such pre-existence.

NOTE—Christ remembered His pre-existent state; why should not we? There is every reason to believe that in the future state we shall remember our present existence; why should we not now remember the past state from which we came?

b. While this theory accounts for inborn spiritual sin such as pride and enmity to God, it gives no explanation of inherited sensual sin, which it holds to have come from Adam, and the guilt of which must logically be denied.

2. The Creation Theory.

It regards the soul of each human being as immediately created by God and joined to the body either at conception, at birth, or at some time between these two. The advocates of the theory, urge in its favor certain texts of Scripture, referring to God as the Creator of the human soul or spirit, together with the fact that there is a marked individuality in the child, which cannot be explained as a mere reproduction of the qualities existing in the parents.

Objections to the Creation Theory.

- a. The passages given in its support may with equal propriety be regarded as expressing God's mediate agency in the origination of human souls; while the general tenor of Scripture, as well as its representations of God as the Author of man's body, favor this latter interpretation. Passages commonly relied upon by creationists, are the following: Eccles. 12:7; Isa. 57:16; Zech. 12:1; Heb. 12:9. But God is with equal clearness declared to be the Former of man's body: (See Psalms. 139:13, 14; Jer. 1:5).
 - b. Creationism regards the earthly father as begetting only the body of his child—certainly as not the father of the child's highest part. This makes the beast to possess nobler powers of propagation than man; for the beast multiplies himself after his own image.
 - c. The individuality of the child, even in the most extreme cases as in the sudden rise in obscure families and surroundings of marked men like Luther, may be better explained by supposing a law of variation impressed upon the species at its beginning—a law whose operation is foreseen and supervised by God.
 - d. This theory, if it allows that the soul is originally possessed of depraved tendencies, makes God the direct Author of moral evil, if it holds the soul to have been created pure, it makes God indirectly the author of moral evil by teaching that He puts this pure soul into a body which will inevitably corrupt it.
- 3. The Traducian Theory.

This view was propounded by Tertullian, and was implicitly held by Augustine. It holds that the human race was immediately created in Adam, and, as respects both body and soul, was propagated from him by natural generation—all souls since Adam being only mediately created by God, as the Upholder of the laws of propagation which were originally established by Him.

Arguments in favor of the Traducian Theory.

- a. It seems best to accord with Scripture, which represents God as creating the species in Adam (Gen. 1:27), and as increasing and perpetuating it through secondary agencies (1:28; cf. 22). Only once is breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life (2:7, cf. 22; I Cor. 11:8; Gen. 4:1; 5:3; 46:26; cf. Acts 17:21-26; Heb. 7:10), and after man's formation God ceases from His work of creation (Gen. 2:2).
- b. It is favored by the analogy of vegetable and animal life, in which increase of numbers is secured, not by a multiplicity of immediate creations, but by the natural derivation of new individuals from a parent stock. A derivation of the human soul from its parents no more implies a materialistic view of the soul and its endless division and subdivision, than the similar derivation of the brute proves the principle of intelligence in the lower animals to be wholly material.

- c. The observed transmission not merely of physical, but of mental and spiritual characteristics in families and races, and especially the uniformly evil moral tendencies and dispositions which all men possess from their birth, are proof that in soul, as well as in body, we derive our being from our human ancestry.
- d. The Traducian doctrine embraces and acknowledges the element of truth which gives plausibility to the creation view. Traducianism, properly defined, admits a Divine concurrence throughout the whole development of the human species, and allows, under the guidance of a superintending Providence, special improvements in type at the birth of marked men, similar to those which we may suppose to have occurred in the introduction of new varieties in the animal creation.

D. The Original State of Man.

I God's Image in Man.

Man was made in the image of God. We should avoid ■ two-fold danger in the interpretation of Scripture, and not put him up so high that he could make no progress, nor on the other hand put him down so low that he could not fall. The image of God in which man was created consisted in a natural and a moral likeness to God.

1. Personality or Natural Likeness to God.

By personality is meant that two-fold power to know self as related to the world and God and to determine self in view of moral ends. This distinguishes man from the brutes. The brute is conscious but not self-conscious. This natural likeness to God is inalienable. It constitutes the capacity for redemption and gives value even to the life of the unregenerate.

NOTE 1—Man cannot lose this element of the Divine image without ceasing to be man. Insanity can only obscure it. Bernard said that it could not be burned out even in hell. The lost piece of money (Luke 15:8), still bore the image and superscription of the king, even though it did not know it and did not know that it was lost. Human nature is, therefore, to be revered. He who destroyed human life was to be put to death (Gen. 9:6). Even men whom we curse are made after the likeness of God (James 3:9). See Psa. 8:5).

NOTE 2—Image does not imply perfect representation in man. Christ is the image of God absolutely. Man is the image of God relatively and derivatively. Since God is Spirit, man made in His image cannot be merely a material thing.

2. Holiness or Moral Likeness to God.

Since holiness is the fundamental attribute of God, it must of necessity be the chief attribute of His image in the moral beings whom He creates. Scripture teaches that original righteousness was essential to this image (Eccles. 7:29; Eph. 4:24; Col. 3:10). This involved the possession of right moral tendencies, such a direction of the will and affections as constitutes God the supreme end of man's being. It is not enough to say that man was created in a state of innocence. Scripture declares that he had a holiness like God's.

Holiness has two sides or phases. It is knowledge and perception as well as inclination and feeling.

II Man's Original Righteousness.

This original righteousness in which man was created is to be viewed in several particulars.

1. It does not constitute the essence of human nature, for in that case, human nature would have ceased to exist as soon as man sinned. A man can change his taste or love without changing the substance of his being. When sin is called a nature, it is only in the sense of being inborn. Nature is from nascor (to be born). It is as proper to call hereditary taste a nature as the substance of one's being.
2. It was not a gift without, foreign to human nature and added to it after man's creation, for man is said to have possessed the Divine image by the fact of creation, not by subsequent bestowal. Adam was created with a holy nature, i. e., tendencies toward God, as all men since Adam are born with a sinful nature, i. e., tendencies away from God.
3. It is rather to be understood as a tendency of man's affections and will, accompanied by the power of evil choice and differing from the perfected holiness of the saints, as instinctive affection and child-like innocence differ from that holiness which has been developed and confirmed by temptation.
4. It was a moral disposition which could be propagated and which if lost would still leave man possessed of a natural likeness to God, making him susceptible to God's redeeming grace. "Only enough likeness to God remained to remind man of what he had lost and to feel the hell of God's forsaking." The moral likeness to God can be restored but only by God Himself.

NOTE—God could not create an intelligent being "on the fence," i. e., evenly balanced between good and evil. A student selected the text, "Adam where art thou?" and the first point of the sermon was, "It is every man's business to be somewhere." Augustine argued that a simple capacity for good and evil is already sinful, since a man who is neutral between good and evil is already a violator of that law which requires likeness to God in the moral nature (Matt. 12:30).

E. The Moral Nature of Man.

I Definition.

By the moral nature of man we mean those powers which fit him for right or wrong action. These powers are intellect, sensibility, and will, together with that peculiar power of discrimination and impulsion, which we call conscience. In order to moral action, man has intellect or reason, to discern the difference between right and wrong; sensibility, to be moved by each of these; free will, to do the one or the other. Intellect, sensibility, and will, are man's three faculties. But in connection with these faculties there is a sort of activity which involves them all, and without which there can be no moral action, namely, the activity of conscience. Conscience applies the moral law to particular cases in our personal experience, and proclaim that law as binding upon us. Only a rational and sentient being can be truly moral; yet it does not come within our province to treat of man's intellect or sensibility in general.

II Essential Elements.

1. Conscience.

As already intimated, conscience is not a separate faculty, like intellect, sensibility, and will, but rather a mode in which these faculties act. Like consciousness, conscience is an accompanying knowledge. Conscience is a knowing of self (including our acts and states) in connection with a moral standard, or law. Adding now the element of feeling, we may say that conscience is man's consciousness of his own moral relations, together with a peculiar feeling in view of them. It thus involves the combined action of the intellect and of the sensibility, and that in view of a certain class of objects, viz.: right and wrong.

NOTE 1—Conscience, discriminative and impulsive.—But we need to define more narrowly both the intellectual and the emotional elements in conscience. As respects the intellectual element, we may say that conscience is a power of judgment. It declares our acts or states to conform, or not to conform, to law; it declares the acts or states which conform to be obligatory,—those which do not conform, to be forbidden. In other words, conscience judges: "This is right (or, wrong)," "I ought (or, I ought not)." In connection with this latter judgment, there comes into view the emotional element of conscience, we feel the claim of duty; there is an inner sense that the wrong must not be done.

NOTE 2—Conscience, the moral judiciary of the soul.—Conscience is the moral judiciary of the soul—the power within of judgment and command. Conscience must judge according to the law given to it, and therefore, since the moral standard accepted by the reason may be imperfect, its decisions, while relatively just, may be absolutely unjust.—Hence the duty of enlightening and cultivating the moral reason, so that conscience may have a proper standard of judgment. The office of conscience is to "bear witness" (Rom. 2:15).

NOTE 3—Conscience in its relation to God as law-giver.—Since conscience, in the proper sense, gives uniform and infallible judgment that the right is supremely obligatory, and that the wrong must be forborne at every cost, it can be called an echo of God's voice, and an indication in man of that which his own true being requires.

2. Will.

Will is the soul's power to choose between motives and to direct its subsequent activity according to the motive thus chosen,—in other words, the soul's power to choose, both an end and the means to attain it. The choice of an ultimate end we call immanent preference; the choice of means we call executive volition.

NOTE 1—Will and other faculties.—We accept the three-fold division of human faculties into intellect, sensibility, and will. Intellect is the soul knowing; sensibility is the soul feeling (desires, affections); will is the soul choosing (end or means). In every act of the soul, all the faculties act. Knowing involves feeling and willing; feeling involves knowing and willing; willing involves knowing and feeling. Logically, each latter faculty involves the preceding action of the former; the soul must know before feeling; must know and feel before willing. Yet since knowing and feeling are activities, neither of these is possible without willing.

NOTE 2—Will and permanent states.—Though every act of the soul involves the action of all the faculties, yet in any particular action one faculty may be more prominent than the others. So we speak of acts of intellect, of affection, of will. This predominant action of any single faculty produces effects upon the other faculties associated with it. The action of will gives a direction to the intellect and to the affections, as well as a permanent bent to the will itself. Each faculty, therefore has its permanent states as well as its transient acts, and the will may originate these states. Hence we speak of voluntary affections, and may with equal propriety speak of voluntary opinions. These permanent voluntary states we denominate character.

NOTE 3—Will and motives.—The permanent states just mentioned, when they have been once determined, also influence the will. Internal views and dispositions, and not simply external presentations, constitute the strength of motives. These motives often conflict, and though the soul never acts without motive, it does notwithstanding choose between motives, and so determines the end toward which it will direct its activities. Motives are not causes, which compel the will, but influences, which persuade it. The power of these motives, however, is proportioned to the strength of will which has entered into them and has made them what they are.

NOTE 4—Will and contrary choice.—Though no act of pure will is possible, the soul may put forth single volitions in a direction opposed to its previous ruling purpose, and thus far man has the power of a contrary choice (Rom. 7:18—"to will is present with me"). But insofar as will has entered into and revealed itself in permanent states of intellect and sensibility and in a settled bent of the will itself, man cannot by a single act reverse his moral state, and in this respect has not the power of a contrary choice. In this latter case he can change his character only indirectly, by turning his attention to considerations fitted to awaken opposite dispositions, and by thus summoning up motives to an opposite course.

NOTE 5—Will and responsibility.—By repeated acts of will put forth in a given moral direction, the affections may become so confirmed in evil or in good as to make previously certain, though not necessary, the future good or evil action of the man. Thus, while the will is free, the man may be the "bondservant of sin" (John 8:31-36) or the "servant of righteousness" (Rom. 6:15-23; cf. Heb. 12:23—"spirits of just men made perfect"). Man is responsible for all effects of will, as well as for will itself; for voluntary affections, as well as for voluntary acts; for the intellectual views into which will has entered, as well as for the acts of will by which these views have been formed in the past or are maintained in the present (II Pet. 3:5—"wilfully forget").

F. The Endless Existence of Man.

- I Spirit is as truly created being as matter, and is as dependent on Omnipotence for continued existence. If the soul of man is to exist forever in its career of activity, it must be because God wills to preserve it thus, for nothing in the universe save God is necessarily self-existent.

NOTE 1—We use the term "man" in this connection to denote whatever is essential to human personality. So long as the person exists, the man exists. The Scriptures predict the endless existence of man.

As to the righteous this is commonly admitted; but as to the wicked, some entertain doubts, yet these doubts cannot spring from any obscurity in the language of Scripture, for the same word is used of both classes in Matt. 25:46.

NOTE 2—We cannot prove the endless existence of the soul absolutely any more than we can prove the existence of God. It is not one of those truths that men believe because they have proved it, but they believe it in the first place and are therefore all the time trying to prove it.

- II God seems to have indicated His purpose of endless existence in man's nature, as that nature expresses itself in the consciousness of the race. To corroborate the revelation of Scripture, we may formulate the following arguments drawn from this consciousness.

1. The Argument from a Progressive Creation.

Endless being is a necessary inference from the Divine progress manifested in creation.

NOTE—This may be called the argument of creative climax. If man ceases to exist at death or a comparatively short time afterward, nature has reached an anti-climax in his creation. The movement towards an end is thus defeated.

2. The Argument from Universal Belief.

Whatever all men everywhere and always have believed is in accordance with the truth. All men have everywhere and always believed in the doctrine of a future, endless existence. Therefore, that doctrine is in accordance with truth.

NOTE—This is sometimes called the historical argument. The testimony of man's nature to endless being may be regarded as the testimony of God Who made the nature. It assumes the fact of such universal belief and also that the very belief contains in itself the assurance of its truthfulness. The first premise must be justified by an appeal to facts. The second will be admitted by those who recognized the hand of God in the constitution of man. These two assumptions admitted, the conclusion must follow.

3. The Argument from Universal Desire.

Every universal and instinctive longing or pre-assurance of man is destined to be satisfied. Man has such longing for endless being and such pre-assurance of it. Therefore, it is destined to be satisfied.

NOTE—This may be called the argument from analogy. As there is light for the eye, air for the lungs, food for hunger, water for thirst, and society for the social instincts, so it is argued that God cannot have created this longing for endless being merely to mock and disappoint man.

4. The Argument from Universal Moral Expectation.

God will complete in the present or the future, the work of rendering exact justice to those under His moral judgment. There are manifold promises and beginnings of this work left incomplete here. Therefore, there must be a future existence in which to complete the work of justice.

NOTE—This is called the ethical argument, and is drawn from God's justice to the endless existence of the wicked as the preceding argument was drawn from God's love to the endless existence of the righteous.

5. The Argument from Human Capabilities.

We are conscious of powers greater than our present opportunity affords employment and exercise.

NOTE—This may be called the argument from temporal limitations. Man is capable of indefinite and seemingly almost infinite growth and development. He beats against the bars of present limitations and longs for a wider range of activities. Endless being is a natural inference from this fact.

6. The Argument from the Scriptures.

- (1) Existence after death in Sheol in a conscious state is the view underlying the Old Testament. In some of the Psalms and later prophets, strong expressions of faith and hope in endless being and immortality are found: II Sam. 22:6; Num. 16:30; Psa. 16:10; 49:14, 15; Job. 14:13; 17:13, 16; 19:25.
- (2) In the New Testament, the doctrine finds abundant warrant,—in the entire teachings of Jesus and in His own resurrection. The Gospel rests upon infinite worth of individual men; human personality is the supreme value for God. To redeem it, was the end of Christ's mission. Only as it has endless being was it worthy of such an end.

G. The Probation of Man.

I The Fact of His Probation.

The Scriptures teach that after his creation God placed man in a garden in Eden and subjected him to a state of probation: Gen. 2:8-17.

NOTE—Eden signifies pleasure, delight. Its exact site cannot be determined. Speaking generally, its location must have been in the Mesopotamian Valley, near the head-waters of the Tigris and Euphrates. The wildest theories have been advanced as to where the Garden of Eden was. There is a serious book written by a serious scholar, called "Paradise Found," claiming that the Garden of Eden was at the North Pole. However, unless revolutionary topological and climatic changes have occurred, Peary's discovery exploded this theory.

II Probation Defined.

Probation, from a Latin word signifying "to prove" or "test," is a period of trial under a law of duty, which is the test of obedience and is enforced by the sanctions of reward for a right choice and good conduct, and punishment for a wrong choice and evil conduct.

Miley says: "Probation is a temporary economy. Its central reality is responsibility for conduct under a law of duty."

III The Necessity of the Probation.

While our first parents were created with holy natures, whose fluctuating emotions and spontaneous tendencies were wholly toward the good, yet they were susceptible to temptation from without. Consequently, a period of probation was essential in order to test their loyalty to God by obedience or disobedience to His command. Thus our divine Lord was likewise susceptible to temptation from without, from the reality and power of which He keenly suffered: Heb. 2:18; 9:14.

NOTE—Dr. Miley says: "With a holy nature, there were yet susceptibilities to temptation. In temptation there is an impulse in the susceptibilities adverse to the law of duty. This is true even where it finds no response in the personal consciousness. Yet, in the measure of it, such impulse is a trial to obedience. The proof of it is in a primitive constitution with susceptibilities which might be the means of temptation. These facts are entirely consistent with the primitive holiness which we have maintained. In such a state primitive man began his moral life. The only way to confirmed blessedness was through temporary obedience. But obedience requires a law of duty, and, with the natural incidence of trial and the possibility of failure, such a law must be a testing law. It thus appears that a probationary economy was the only one at all suited to the state of primitive man."

IV The Purpose of the Probation.

The purpose of the probation of our first parents was, so to speak, to test their virtue—to transform their holy natures into holy characters. As has been pointed out, a moral character is produced only by probation, by the free personal choice of good in the presence of evil and with full power to choose evil. Now Adam and Eve were created with holy moral natures. A right choice—that is, obedience to God's command—would have transformed these holy moral natures into holy moral characters. As it was, however, their wrong choice—that is, disobedience to the command—transformed their holy moral natures into sinful moral characters, and involved both themselves and their posterity in the guilt of sin and the defilement of depravity.

NOTE—God well knew the great obstacle to perfection in the creature, and that, until it could be removed, He was unable to show forth His love and pour out His bounty to the full. He could not endow men with great power and wisdom; He could not make them excellent in majesty and glorious in might, swift as the winds or the lightning to do His will, until they had passed the danger of abusing His gifts, and so falling as the sinful angels had done before them.

Therefore they should not be perfect from the day of their creation; but, by a painful yet most salutary experience, should learn their own creature weakness: they should be imprisoned in bodies of humiliation (Phil. 3:21); they should be left to try what their own strength could do, to endeavor to save themselves by their own arm amid the hostile powers of darkness, which should not, therefore, be at once consigned to the doom of the obstinately rebellious: they should fall, but by the merciful pre-arrangement of God not an eternally fatal, not a hopeless fall: they should know what it is to abide in sin, and so to be consumed by His anger, to be troubled by His wrath, to be subjected to vanity, wasting, and decay: with shuddering awe they should enter into the thickening darkness which enshrouds the dread portals of death: all their beauty should turn to corruption, their bodies, however majestic or fair, become repulsive and loathsome.

And through and out of all this they should be saved by a power not their own: benighted, helpless, distraught, not knowing whither to turn, they should be led by the hand of Another: their sin, which they would be utterly unable to expiate, should be punished in the person of a Substitute; the only begotten Son of their loving Creator should die in their stead. Thus should they be taught the absolute dependence of the creature upon the love and power of the Almighty God.

V The Test of the Probation.

The probationary or testing law is recorded in Gen. 2:16, 17: "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

NOTE—In character this probationary or testing law was positive, not moral. The difference is that while "the obligation of a moral law is intrinsic and absolute, the obligation of a positive law arises from a Divine commandment." In other words, a moral command carries its own reason for obedience, but a positive command does not. Thus, the ten commandments are moral in character, because we are so constituted as to understand their reasonableness and realize their necessity. For, the ten commandments are not right because they were given of God; they were given of God because they were right. On the other hand, God's call to Abraham to offer up Isaac (Gen. 22) was a positive command, because Abraham did not understand its reasonableness or realize its necessity. Another name for positive command is personal command. Now, it is of the very essence of moral probation that the testing law should be a positive or personal command, the reasonableness and necessity of which are not made known to the one who is subjected to the probation. In the case of our first parents, as we have seen, the probationary law was a positive or personal command. It was God's right to command: it was the duty of Adam and Eve to obey.

Since man was not yet in a state of confirmed holiness, but rather of simple childlike innocence, he could be made perfect only through temptation. Hence the "tree of the knowledge of good and evil." Gen. 2:9. The one slight command best tested the spirit of obedience. Temptation did not necessitate a fall. If resisted, it would strengthen virtue. The ability not to sin would have become the inability to sin. The tree was mainly a tree of probation. It is right for a father to make his son's title to his estate depend upon the performance of some filial duty, as Thaddeus Stevens made his son's possession of property conditional upon his keeping the temperance-pledge. Whether, besides this, the tree of knowledge was naturally hurtful or poisonous, we do not know.

VI The Reasonableness of the Probation.

The reasonableness of the primitive probation is seen from the following facts:

1. In the love and wisdom of God, who could not and would not have subjected our first parents to any state of trial or probationary test which was not for their highest development and eternal welfare and consequently absolutely necessary. Therefore, the prohibition of Gen. 2:17 must have been just, wise, and good.
2. In the manifold source of delight and satisfaction which were provided for Adam and Eve by their Maker: Gen. 2:9. They had everything.

H. The Temptation of Man.

I General Statement.

The Scriptures clearly and distinctly teach that our first parents were tempted to sin by disobeying God's positive command. The third chapter of Genesis gives the fullest account of that which became an awful tragedy in the experience of mankind. Other references to it are found in such passages as II Cor. 11:3; I Tim. 2:14.

II The Agent in Man's Temptation.

The natural agent in the temptation of our first parents was the serpent; the higher and supernatural agent, however, was Satan: Gen. 3:1, 4, 5; II Cor. 11:3; Rev. 12:9.

NOTE—The serpent is included among the beasts. He is described as being more subtle than they all. The Hebrew word translated subtle signifies crafty or cunning. It is not unlikely that originally the serpent was a very beautiful creature; and he seems to have possessed the power of upright locomotion: Gen. 3:14. The devil used the serpent as an instrument in tempting Adam and Eve. Thus back of this "beast of the field" was a higher, even a supernatural intelligence. God's curse upon the serpent makes this fact unmistakable: Gen. 3:14, 15,—particularly the latter verse.

III Possible Reason of Satan and the Fallen Angels in Tempting Man.

They were probably stimulated to their fell purpose to secure man's downfall, not only by pure malignity and the wish to oppose God whenever they could do so indirectly, but also by a desire to prolong their reign. For, knowing themselves to be rebels, they were probably well aware that the Almighty never intended sinless man to be subject to them, and that in Adam He was raising up a seed, not merely to inhabit the earth but also to take possession of the realms of the air. Hence we can easily understand their desire to retard, at least, the counsel of God by reducing the new creation to their own level of sin and ruin. And perchance, they may have known from experience that the result would be a delay of long ages during which the mercy of the Supreme Being would grant His creatures time for repentance and recovery.

IV Reasons Which May Have Determined Satan to Make His First Assault upon Eve in Subtlety.

1. He would not make his assault with power and terror, for that would drive the assailed into the arms of their Protector instead of drawing them away from Him, and their earnest cries for help would quickly call down judgments upon their daring foe.
2. He would present himself in the form of an inferior and subject animal, from which they would never suspect harm.
3. He would not approach the man and the woman together; for combined they might uphold one another in the obedience and love of God. And he well knew that if he were once detected and baffled, a second attempt would be attended with far more difficulties; nay, might, by some appeal of Adam to God, be rendered altogether impracticable.

NOTE—Two reasons may have deterred Satan from tempting Adam alone. Had he commenced by overcoming the man, and then through him work the fall of the woman, her ruin would have been incomplete; she would not have been wholly without excuse before God, since she would have acted under the orders or influence of the one whom He had set over her.

And secondly; man, as we have before seen, consists of three parts, spirit, soul, and body; and of these the soul is predominant in consequence of its power over the body. Now, it is just in this point that the weakness of man lies, in the fact that his body is psychic and not spiritual. But Adam was created directly from the image of God, Eve only mediately so. If, then, the man was an imperfect image through the predominance of his soul, this defect would naturally be increased in the woman, who would, therefore, be the more susceptible of outward form and beauty, and of all emotions connected with the sense and self-consciousness, while the influence of her spirit would be proportionally diminished. On this second account also Satan would seem to have chosen her as the fittest object for his first attack.

Influenced, then, by some such considerations as these, the powers of evil either watched till Adam was absent, or, perhaps, by that mysterious power which we often feel but cannot explain, drew him away from his wife, and, when she was alone, enticed her through the garden towards the tree in its midst. But, however it happened, she at any rate suffered herself to be allured to the fatal spot, and so gave opportunity to the devil.

4. Steps Taken by Eve Which Led to the Fall may be outlined as follows:

- (1) Loitering in the realm of temptation.
- (2) Laxity in watchfulness and guarding against temptation.
- (3) Listening to its slanderous suggestion by the tempter.
- (4) Lessening of faith in an immanent and covenant keeping Lord.
- (5) Letting down of the standard value of the Word of God as the rule of faith and practice.
- (6) Looking at that which was prohibited.
- (7) Lusting for that which was forbidden.

NOTE—By most skillful interrogation, Satan envelopes Eve in the mist of error from at least five out-springing suggestions:

1. He throws her off her guard by his assumed ignorance.
2. He stirs up vanity from the depths of her self-consciousness by giving her an opportunity to correct and instruct him.
3. He uses the term Elohim, and not the covenant name Jehovah, to represent the Creator as far distant and as having but little concern with His creatures.
4. He puts in a doubt as to whether God had uttered the prohibition and hints at the possibility of a mistake.
5. He insinuates the blasphemous thought that hardness and caprice on God's part are not inconceivable but may sometimes be expected.

I. The Fall of Man.

The doctrine of the Fall of Man is not peculiar to Christianity; all religions contain an account of it, and recognize the great and awful fact. Had there been no such account as that found in Genesis 3, there would still have remained the problem of the fall and sin.

NOTE—Yet, the doctrine of the Fall has a relation to Christianity that it does not have to other religions or religious systems. The moral character of God as seen in the Christian religion far surpasses the delineation of the Supreme Being set forth in any other religion, and thus heightens and intensifies its idea of sin. It is when men consider the very high character of God as set forth in Christianity, and then look at the doctrine of sin, that they find it hard to reconcile the fact that God, being the moral Being He is, should ever allow sin to come into the world. To some minds these two things seem incompatible.

I The Scriptural Fact of Man's Fall.

The Scriptures clearly and distinctly teach that Adam and Eve fell from their first estate in sinning against God by disobeying His positive and personal command, not to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil: Gen. 3:6; Rom. 5:12, 19; I Tim. 2:14.

NOTE 1—A careful reading of the narrative leads to the following remarks:

The sin of our first parents was purely volitional; it was an act of their own determination. Their sin was, like all other sin, a voluntary act of the will. It came from an outside source, that is to say, it was instigated from without. There was no sin in the nature of the first human pair. Consequently there must have been an ungodly principle already in the world. Undoubtedly the fall of Satan and the evil angels had taken place already.

The essence of the first sin lay in the denial of the Divine will; and elevation of the will of man over the will of God.

It was a deliberate transgressing of a divinely marked boundary; an overstepping of the Divine limits.

In its last analysis, the first sin was, what each and every sin committed since has been, a positive disbelief in the Word of the living God, a belief of Satan rather than a belief in God.

It is helpful to note that the same lines of temptation that were presented to our first parents, were presented to Christ in the wilderness (Matt. 4:1-11), and to men ever since then (I John 2:15-17). Satan's program is short and shallow, after all.

NOTE 2—The purpose of the Genesis narrative is not to give account of the manner in which sin came into the world, but how it found its advent into the human race. Sin was already in the world, as the existence of Satan and the chaotic condition of things in the beginning, strikingly testify.

The reasonableness of the narrative of the fall is seen in view of the condition of man after he had sinned with his condition when he left the hand of the Creator. Compare Gen. 1:26 with 6:5, and Psa. 14. If the fall of man were not narrated in Genesis we should have to postulate some such event to account for the present condition in which we find man. In no part of the Scripture, save in the creation account as found in the first two chapters of Genesis, does man appear perfect and upright. His attitude is that of rebellion against God, of deepening and awful corruption.

1. Various Interpretations of the Scripture Narrative of Man's Fall.

(1) The Allegorical.

Some look upon the whole narrative as being an allegory. Adam is the rational part of man; Eve, the sensual; the serpent, external excitements to evil. But the simplicity and artlessness of the narrative militates against this view.

(2) Mythological.

Others, again, designate the narrative as being a myth. It is regarded as a truth invested in poetic form; something made up from the folklore of the times. But why should these few verses be snatched out of the chapter in which they are found and be called mythical, while the remaining verses are indisputably literal?

(3) Literal.

Then there is the literal interpretation, which takes the account as it reads, in its perfectly natural sense, just as in the case of the other parts of the same chapter, not regarding it as mythical or allegorical, but historical. We adopt this view for the following reasons:

- a. There is no intimation in the account itself that it is not historical.
- b. As a part of a historical book, the presumption is that it is itself historical.
- c. The later Scripture writers refer to it as a veritable history even in its details.

- d. The geographical locations in connection with the story are historical.
- e. Particular features of the narrative, such as the placing of our first parents in a garden and the speaking of the tempter through a serpent form, are incidents suitable to man's condition of innocent, but untried childhood.
- f. The curse upon the man, upon the woman, and upon the ground are certainly literal. It is a fact that death is in the world as the wages of sin.
- g. This view that the narrative is historical does not forbid our assuming that the trees of life and of knowledge were symbols of spiritual truths, while at the same time they were outward realities.

II The Immediate Effects of Man's First Sin.

The immediate effects of sin (Gen. 3:7-13) were six in number, viz:

- 1. A sense of shame.
This was due to the awakening of conscience.
- 2. The covering of fig leaves.
This was a bloodless covering. See Gen 3:21; Phil 3:9.
- 3. A feeling of fear.
This arose from their guilty conscience.
- 4. An attempt at concealment.
Foolishly Adam and Eve supposed that they could hide from the presence of God.
- 5. An effort at self-vindication.
Though guilty, yet Adam and Eve tried to justify themselves.
- 6. The shifting of blame.
Adam laid the blame for his sin upon Eve, and Eve laid the blame for her sin upon the serpent, i. e., Satan.

III The Judicial Consequences of the First Sin.

1. Divine Judgment.

After this painful scene, the Lord God pronounced a four-fold judgment: Gen. 3:14-19:

(1) Upon the serpent.

This was the curse of degradation: Micah 7:17.

NOTE—During the Millennium the curse upon the serpent will not be removed, for the serpent is the type of Satan: Isa. 65:25.

(2) Upon the woman.

This was the judgment of sorrow and subjection: John 16:21.

NOTE—The blessing of the Gospel mitigates the rigor of the law: I Tim. 2:15.

(3) Upon the man.

This was the judgment of sorrow and toil: Job. 5:7; Eccl. 2:22, 23.

NOTE—Work is a blessing and not a curse: Gen. 2:9, 15. It is only the curse resting upon the ground which makes man's labor vexatious and unremunerative.

(4) Upon the ground.

This was the curse of thorns and thistles.

NOTE—Like the serpent, the thorn is the natural enemy of man: Matt. 7:16. It is used in Scripture as a symbol of evil: Num. 33:55; II Cor. 12:7. Our Lord's mock crown was composed of thorns: John 19:2, 5. During the Millennium the curse upon the ground will be removed: Isaiah 55:13.

2. Separation.

The four-fold Divine judgment resulted in a three-fold separation: Gen. 3:22-24. Thus Adam and Eve were separated:

(1) From the Tree of Life.

NOTE—Dr. Pardington says: "The tree of life represents wisdom: Prov. 3:18. Wisdom personified is Christ: I Cor. 1:24. So the tree of life was an emblem of Christ: Rev. 2:7; 22:14. Adam's body was mortal: Gen. 2:7; I Cor. 15:44, 45, 47. Science teaches us that physical life involves decay and loss. There was, however, a Divine provision for checking this decay and loss, and preserving the body's youth. This was by means of the tree of life. It accomplished this through its sacramental value; that is, eating of this tree was symbolical of the communion of Adam and Eve with God and of their dependence upon Him. But this only because it had a physical efficacy. Physical immortality without holiness would have been unending misery. Accordingly, our first parents were shut out from the tree of life, until by redemption and resurrection such of their descendants as accept Christ can be prepared to partake thereof. Thus, our glorified bodies will be preserved throughout eternity by eating of the tree of life which is typical of our blessed Lord Himself: Rev. 2:7; 22:14. Physical decay and loss, which ended in the death of their bodies, began the instant Adam and Eve were denied access to the tree of life. The nine hundred and thirty years Adam lived, as also the extraordinary longevity of the antediluvians, is evidence of their wonderful natural vitality. If Adam had maintained his integrity, the body might have been developed and transfigured without the intervention of death. In other words; the posse non mori (that is, able not to die) might have become a non posse mori (that is, not able to die)' (Strong). In his 'Crises of the Christ' Campbell Morgan treats the transfiguration of Christ as the flowering of humanity; he regards it as God's demonstration of the fruition of the body—if there had been no sin."

(2) From the Garden.

NOTE—The only way to make the exclusion of Adam and Eve from the tree of life effective was to drive them from the Garden of Eden. And this the LORD God did, sending man forth "to till the ground from whence he was taken."

(3) From the Personal and Visible Presence of God.

NOTE—Sin separates man from God,—and it is the only thing that can separate man from God. When Adam and Eve hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God, it was because their sin with its resulting guilt and shame had morally unfitted them for personal and face-to-face communion and fellowship with their Maker. Separation from the Garden of Eden, therefore, simply sealed the spiritual separation of man from God which sin had already brought about. Henceforth, our first parents and their posterity had only a symbolical representation of Deity: the cherubim and the flaming sword placed at the east of the Garden of Eden were the visible manifestation of the LORD God. Thither the godly antediluvians came to worship and sacrifice: for there is no evidence that these primitive types of the presence and power, the mercy and redeeming grace of God, did not remain until swept away by the flood. The flaming sword (3:24) was the first appearance of that self-luminous flame which, as the Shekinah glory, rested over the mercy seat in the Holy of Holies in the tabernacle and the temple.

3 Death.

In connection with the prohibition to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil the LORD God said, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (lit. dying thou shalt die): Gen. 2:17.

This death, which was the result of sin, was three-fold, viz.: physical, spiritual, and eternal.

(1) Physical Death.

Physical death is the separation of the soul from the body. It includes, according to Dr. Strong, "All those temporal evils and sufferings which result from disturbance of the original harmony between soul and body, and which are the working of death in us": Num. 16:29; 27:3; Psa. 90:7-9, 11; Isa. 38:17, 18; Rom. 4:24, 25; 6:9, 10; 8:3, 10, 11; I Cor. 15:21, 22; Gal. 3:13; I Pet. 4:6.

NOTE—Some regard physical death as a part of the penalty of sin, while others regard it as rather the natural consequence of sin. In either view, it seems to be clear that weakness and disease followed by death resulted primarily from the exclusion of Adam and Eve from the tree of life.

(2) Spiritual Death.

Spiritual death is the separation of the spirit from God. It includes, according to Dr. Strong, "all that pain of conscience, loss of peace, and sorrow of spirit which result from the disturbance of the normal relation between the soul and God": Matt. 8:22; Luke 15:32; John 5:24; 8:51; Rom. 8:13; Eph. 2:1; 5:14; I Tim. 5:6; James 5:20; I John 3:14.

NOTE—Dr. Strong says: "It cannot be doubted that the penalty pronounced in the Garden and fallen upon the race is primarily and mainly that death of the soul which consists in its separation from God. In this sense only, death was fully visited upon Adam in the day on which he ate the forbidden fruit: Gen. 2:17. In this sense only, death was escaped by the Christian: John 11:26. For this reason, in the parallel between Adam and Christ, Rom. 5:12-21, the apostle passes from the thought of mere physical death in the early part of the passage to that of both physical and spiritual death at its close, verse 21: 'as sin reigned in death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord'—Where 'eternal life' is more than endless physical existence, and 'death' is more than death of the body."

(3) Eternal Death.

Eternal death is the result of spiritual death. It is, according to Strong, "the culmination and completion of spiritual death, and essentially consists of the correspondence of the outward with the inward state of the evil soul: Acts 1:25. It would seem to be inaugurated by some peculiar repellent energy of the Divine holiness, Matt. 25:41; II Thess. 1:9, and to involve positive retribution visited by a personal God upon both body and soul of the evil-doer: Matt. 10:28; Heb. 10:31; Rev. 14:11." Eternal death is the same as hell, or gehenna, or the second death: Matt. 10:28; see II Kings 23:10; Rev. 20:14.

NOTE—Both spiritual and eternal death were arrested by grace through the institution of sacrifice: Gen. 3:21; 4:4; Heb. 9:22. Thus, the Coming One who was to "taste death for every man" saved those in the Old Testament age who through obedience and sacrifice believed in Him: Rom. 3:25; Heb. 2:9.

STUDY QUESTIONS ON ANTHROPOLOGY

1. What are the ancient and modern views of Abiogenesis to which the scriptural doctrine of the origin of man is opposed?
2. Give a brief explanation and history of the theory of Spontaneous Generation.
3. What is Evolution?
4. What is the basic assumption of Evolution?
5. What does this theory assume with reference to the existence of matter and force?
6. Describe the gaps which are to be found all the way from the lowest form of matter to the highest form of life.
7. Show how Evolution as a theory of origins fails in relation to the following: Matter and Force, Life, Animal Kingdom, The Species, i. e., Vertebrates, Mammals.
8. What inference is drawn from the fact that there are many species that have features in common, and why is it unwarranted?
9. What is the actual condition found in the various orders and species and the countless billions of organisms comprised in them with reference to change?
10. If Evolution were the law of progress of the universe, what would be the result?
11. What admission is made by the Evolutionist concerning the individual organism and what false distinction is made between the individual and the species?
12. Give the assumption of Evolution concerning the two opposite and antagonistic tendencies with which all things in the organic world are endowed, and its refutation.
13. What may be said concerning varieties within species and concerning crossing line of species?
14. What is the scriptural teaching concerning the origin of man? Quote passage.
15. What does the use of the Hebrew word "bara" for "create" show concerning mankind and how is this supplemented by the findings of science?
16. Explain the two points involved in the unity of the human race.
17. Quote one or more passages of Scripture which teach that the whole human race descended from a single pair.
18. Of what doctrine is it the basis and of what obligation is it the ground?
19. Give the extra scriptural arguments for the unity of the race.
20. Define the two-fold nature of man as constituted by creation and give three-fold proof of same quoting one passage with each.

21. In the detailed account of man's creation what three points are to be considered?
22. Give a description of the formation and creation of man in his three-fold nature; spirit, soul, and body.
23. In what sense did man become a living soul through the inbreathing of the breath of lives?
24. Show from Scripture what will be the ruling power in our resurrection state.
25. Give scriptural argument for the tri-partite being of man and show the function of each part in human consciousness.
26. Give the Pre-existent Theory of the soul's origin and the objections to it.
27. Give the Creationist Theory of the origin of the soul and the objections raised.
28. Give the Traducian Theory of the origin of the soul and the arguments in its favor.
29. What two-fold danger needs to be avoided in interpreting the Scriptures concerning the image of God in man?
30. Describe man's personality or natural likeness to God showing its indestructibility.
31. What representation of God is implied by image in man as contrasted with that of Christ?
32. Describe man's holiness or moral likeness to God prior to the fall.
33. Describe the original righteousness of man in its several particulars.
34. Give definition of the moral nature of man and its component parts.
35. Give the definition of conscience.
36. Give description of conscience under the following heads: conscience, discriminative and impulsive; conscience, the moral judiciary of the soul: conscience, in its relation to God as lawgiver.
37. Give definition of will.
38. Describe will under the following heads: will and other faculties; will and permanent states; will and motives; will and contrary choice; will and responsibility.
39. Quote passage of scripture teaching the endless existence of man and give corroborative arguments proving it.
40. Describe the probation of man under the following heads: The Fact; The Definition; The Necessity; The Purpose; The Test; The Reasonableness.
41. Describe the Temptation of man under the following heads: General Statement; The Agent; Possible reason of Satan and fallen angels in tempting man; Reasons for making attack on Eve in subtlety and alone.
42. What were the steps taken by Eve in the fall?

43. Give five outspringing suggestions by which Satan enveloped Eve in the mist of error.
44. Show the relation of the doctrine of the fall to other religions and its peculiar relation to Christianity.
45. Give seven considerations which a careful reading of the Genesis narrative of the fall suggests.
46. Give the various interpretations of the Scripture narrative of the fall and the arguments for accepting the literal interpretation.
47. What were the immediate effects of man's first sin?
48. What were the judicial consequences of the first sin? Quote passages where given.
49. Describe the three-fold separation resulting from the Divine judgment.
50. Describe the three-fold death involved in the penalty of the first sin, and quote one passage with each.

CHAPTER SIX

HAMARTIALOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF SIN

- A. THE ORIGIN OF SIN.
- B. THE FACT OF SIN.
- C. THE NATURE OF SIN.
- D. THE CULPABILITY OF SIN.
- E. THE CONSEQUENCE OF SIN.
- F. THE UNIVERSALITY OF SIN.

A. The Origin of Sin.

The origin of sin is wrapped in obscurity. It is one of the unrevealed mysteries of Scripture. We are, however, given a hint of the entrance of sin into the heart of Satan and also the introduction of sin into the human race.

I The Entrance of Sin into the Angelic Realm.

1. In Isaiah 14:12-17, in the picture of the fall of Lucifer, the son of the morning (the King of Babylon, vs. 4), we have an account, it is believed, of the rebellion of Satan against God. Notice the expression "I will" five times repeated—especially the last instance: "I will be like the Most High," vs. 14.
2. Again in Ezekiel 28, in the prophet's lamentation upon the king of Tyre, we have a hint, it is believed, that Satan fell by reason of pride of heart, vs. 17.

NOTE—How a pure being, possessed of those intellectual capacities and moral intuitions which were needful to make him justly responsible to Divine law, could and did lapse from his primitive innocence and fall into sin is one of those dark problems which philosophers and theologians have vainly endeavored to solve. No more reliable explanation of sin's entrance into the universe in general and into this world in particular has ever been given than that which is furnished by Scripture.

According to Scripture, sin first made its appearance in the angelic race, though nothing more is recorded than the simple fact that the angels sinned (II Pet. 2:4) and kept not their first estate (or principality) but left their own (or proper) habitation (Jude 6), their motive or reason for doing so receiving scant mention. The obvious deduction is that the sin of these fallen spirits was a free act on their part, dictated by dissatisfaction with the place which had been assigned to them in the hierarchy of heaven and by ambition to secure for themselves a loftier station than that in which they had been placed. Yet this does not answer the question how such dissatisfaction and ambition could arise in beings that must be presumed to have been created sinless. And inasmuch as external influence in the shape of temptation from without, by intelligences other than themselves, is by the supposition excluded, it does not appear that other answer is possible than that in the creation of a finite personality endowed with freedom of will, there is necessarily involved the possibility of making a wrong, in the sense of a sinful, choice.

II The Entrance of Sin into the Human Race.

The introduction of sin into the human race is recorded in the third chapter of Genesis and in other Scriptures. It came about in a four-fold way:

1. Through deception. See I Tim. 2:14.
2. Through man's disobedience. See Rom. 5:19.
3. Through the serpent's enticement. See Gen. 3:1-6.
4. Through Satan's malignity. See Rev. 12:9.

NOTE—In the case of man, sin's entrance into the world receives a somewhat different explanation by the sacred writers from that given to its entrance into the angelic realm. With one accord, they ascribe the sinful actions, words, feelings and thoughts of each individual to his own deliberate free choice, so that he is thereby, with perfect justice, held responsible for his deviation from the path of moral rectitude; but some of the inspired penmen make it clear that the entrance of sin into this world was effected through the disobedience of the first man who stood and acted as the representative and surety of his whole natural posterity (Rom. 5:12), and that the first man's fall was brought about by temptation from without, by the seductive influence of Satan, the lord of the fallen spirits already mentioned, the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience (Gen. 2:1-6; John 8:44; II Cor. 11:3; Eph. 2:2). They teach that the first man's lapse from a state of innocence entailed disastrous consequences upon himself and his descendants. Upon himself it wrought immediate disturbance of his whole nature (as already explained), implanting in it the seeds of degeneration, bodily, mental, moral and spiritual, filling him with fear of his Maker, laying upon his conscience a burden of guilt, darkening his perceptions of right and wrong, (as was seen in his unheeding attempt to excuse himself by blaming his wife), and interrupting the hitherto peaceful relations which had subsisted between himself and the Author of his being. Upon his descendants it opened the floodgates of corruption by which their natures even from birth fell beneath the power of evil, as was soon witnessed in the dark tragedy of fratricide with which the tale of human history began, and in the rapid spread of violence through the pre-diluvian world.

This is what theologians call the doctrine of "Original Sin," by which they mean that the results of Adam's sin, both legal and moral, have been transmitted to Adam's posterity, so that now each individual comes into the world, not like his first father, in a state of moral equilibrium—"born good," as Lord Palmerston of England used to say, or in the words of Pelagius—"born without virtue and without vice, but capable of both," but as the inheritor of a nature that has been disempowered by sin.

That this doctrine, though frequently opposed, has a basis in science and philosophy, as well as in Scripture, is becoming every day more apparent. The scientific law of heredity by which not only physical but mental and moral characteristics are transmitted from parent to child seems to justify the Scripture statement, that "by one man's disobedience sin entered into the world and death by sin and so death passed upon all men, because that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12). Whether confirmed or contradicted by modern thought, the doctrine of Scripture shines like a sunbeam, that man is "conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity" (Psa. 51:5), that children are "estranged from the womb and go astray" (Psa. 58:3), that all are by nature "children of wrath" (Eph. 2:3), that "the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth" (Gen. 8:21), and that everyone requires to have "a new heart" created in him (Psa. 51:10), since "that which is born of the flesh is flesh" (John 3:6), and "no man can bring a clean thing out of an unclean" (Job. 15:14). If these passages do not show that the Bible teaches the doctrine of original, or transmitted and inherited, sin, it is difficult to see in what clearer or more emphatic language the doctrine could have been taught. The truth of the doctrine may be challenged by those who repudiate the authority of Scripture; that it is a doctrine of Scripture can hardly be denied.

B. The Fact of Sin.

Sin is a reality and not an illusion although some have so pronounced it on the ground of fatalism. They say that God has fixed all events by His purpose and agency. As all events must take place as He has determined, and as His purpose is good, there can be therefore no such thing as sin. Others deny its existence on the ground of hereditary depravity. They maintain that as men are born with a damaged and depraved nature, they are not, therefore, blameworthy for their evil conduct.

NOTE—A fact is something which is obvious as the sun in its shining, as coal in its blackness, as snow in its whiteness, as the fire in its warmth, as the lark in its soaring, as the sea in its motion, and as the violet in its perfume. Sin is a fact, whether it be latent in the slumbering volcanoes of man's depraved nature, or patent in the devastating lava of man's fiery passion.

I Nature Proclaims It.

Ruskin says, "No good nor lovely thing exists in this world, without its correspondent darkness." Roses have their thorns. Physical death and darkness were in the world before man's sin, but moral and spiritual death and darkness are the result of his sin, as far as the race is concerned. Man's sin caused spiritual death to pass through his whole nature, and blighted and cursed creation (Gen. 3:17).

The fact of sin is heard in the minor key of nature's voice. The howl of the tempest, the sigh of the wind, the moan of the sea, the mew of the cat, the bark of the dog, the lowing of the cattle, the cry of the vulture, the shriek of the captured animal, the bleat of the sheep, and the croak of the raven—all tell how.

"Disproportioned sin
Jarred against Nature's chime, and with hoarse din
Brake the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion swayed."

II Men Acknowledged the Fact of Sin.

Man knows he is wrong, he fails to do the right, he cannot fulfill his own ideals, he longs for a power to lift him out of himself, and he knows if the past is not blotted out it will meet him again, to condemn him in the future.

NOTE—Seneca, the philosopher, confesses, "We have all sinned, some more, some less." Ovid, the writer, says, "We always strive after what is forbidden." Goethe, the seer, remarks, "I see no fault which I might not myself have committed." Coleridge, the thinker, declares, "I am a fallen creature. . . . an evil ground existed in my will previously to any given act." The Chinese speak of "two good men; one dead, the other unborn." The poet sighs,

"O that there would arise a man in me
That the man I am may cease to be."

III Law Discovers the Fact of Sin.

"By the law is the knowledge of sin," Rom. 3:20. The word "knowledge" (gnosis) is more than the recognition or the knowing about anything, it is "epignosis" which signifies an exact knowledge, a personal acquaintance with a person or thing.

NOTE—The natural man will recognize that certain acts in the life of an individual are sin, but he is not prepared to acknowledge the seeds of the same sins to be found in himself. Religious Saul of Tarsus thought he was free from sin till the Spirit opened his eyes to see himself in the looking-glass of the law, then he found that desire in the heart was action in the life in the sight of the Holy One (Rom. 7:7).

Man does wrong because he is wrong, and the law by its deep spirituality touches the root and core of things, and thus reveals to man that sin within unseen by men is as much sin in the sight of God as what men see without. The law is a standard to reveal man's shortness of God's glory (Rom. 3:19); a scale to make known to man his deficiencies (Jas. 2:10); a looking-glass to show man his sinfulness (Rom. 7:7); a stethoscope to discover man's disease (Matt. 5:27-37); a rule to evidence his crookedness (Rom. 7:14); an officer to demand man's condemnation (Gal. 3:10); and a judge to condemn to death (Rom. 7:10).

IV God Declares the Fact of Sin.

The highest court of appeal is the sacred oracle of God's truth. There are many similes which God uses to bring home the fact, the force, and the folly of sin. (See Note).

NOTE—Sin, like the beast in the Book of Revelation, is many-headed, and as glaring in its pronounced iniquity. Sin is a grievous malady contaminating the whole of the being, as the Lord said of the iniquity of Sodom, when He pronounced it "great" and "very grievous" (Gen. 18:20); sin is an obscuring cloud which hides the face of God's approval and blessing, as we read in Isaiah 59:2, "Your sins have hid His face from you;" sin is a binding cord which keeps the powers of man from fulfilling their designed functions—the wicked is said "to be holden with the cords of his sins" (Prov. 5:22); sin is a crouching beast which waits to spring upon its victim to his destruction, as Jehovah reminded Cain when He declared "sin croucheth at the door," (Gen. 4:7); sin is a rest-destroyer which unhinges the mind and plunges it in the throes of travail and anguish, as David found when he exclaimed, "There is no rest in my bones because of my sin" (Psa. 38:3); sin is a blessing-robber which strips and starves, to the soul's nakedness and destitution, as Jeremiah reminded Judah, when he spoke of the cause of their captivity, and said, "Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have witholden good from you" (Jer. 5:25); sin is a terrible desolator which devastates the manhood like an earthquake devastating some fair city to its overthrow—"I will make thee sick in smiting thee, in making thee desolate, because of thy sins" (Micah 6:13) is the affirmation of Jehovah against the wicked; sin is a tripper-up which continually throws the sinner over to his hurt by the obstacles which it places in his way, as the wise man remarks, "wickedness overthroweth the sinner" (Prov. 13:6); sin is a written record which leaves its indelible mark upon the man who commits it—"Sin . . . is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond it is graven upon the heart" (Jer. 17:1); sin is a betraying presence which "will out," no matter how carefully one seeks to hide it—"Ye have made your iniquities to be remembered, in that your transgressions are discovered, so that all your sins do appear" (Ezek. 21:24) was God's solemn word long ago; sin is an accusing witness which points its condemning finger at the prisoner arraigned before the bar of justice, as we read in Holy Writ, "our sins testify against us" (Isa. 59:12); sin is a sum of addition, which is ever adding to its catalogue of ills as Jehovah once plaintively said, "Woe to the rebellious children . . . that take counsel but not of Me, and that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may add sin to sin" (Isa. 30:1).

V Christ Reveals the Fact of Sin.

The white light of Christ's holy presence makes known the unholy condition of the sinner, as does every other manifestation of the presence of God.

NOTE—Every recorded manifestation of Christ's holiness made those to whom He revealed Himself conscious of their sinfulness. This may be illustrated by the following "I am's" of confession:

- The seeing of Jehovah in His holiness made Isaiah cry, "I am undone" (Isa. 6:5).
- The remembrance of God's deliverances moved David to exclaim, "I am a worm" (Psa. 22:6).
- The loveliness of the Beloved caused the bride to exclaim, "I am black" (Cant. 1:5).
- The manifestation of Christ's power urged Peter to confess, "I am a sinful man" (Luke 5:8).
- The contemplation of the father's home prompted the prodigal to own, "I am no more worthy, etc." (Luke 15:19).
- The application of the law of God in its spirituality led Paul to declare, "I am carnal" (Rom. 7:14).
- The unveiling of God's glory led Job to his heart-cry, "I am vile" (Job 40:4).
- The consciousness of the Lord's remembrance made the Psalmist say, "I am poor and needy" (Psa. 40:17).
- The sense of Jehovah's presence caused Jacob to acknowledge, "I am not worthy of the least of all Thy mercies" (Gen. 32:10).
- The knowledge of Christ makes everyone who sees himself in the light of His presence to exclaim, "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners of whom I am chief" (I Tim. 1:15).

VI Experience Proves the Fact of Sin.

The field of universal confession would prove this, but of the confessions found in the expression "I have sinned" recorded in the Bible we have sufficient illustrations.

NOTE—Pharoah, the hardened coward, says, "I have sinned," as he sees the consequence of his rebellion against Jehovah (Ex. 9:27; 10:16); Balaam, the scheming trimmer, exclaims, "I have sinned," when the angel bars his self-willed way (Num. 22:34); Achan, the covetous rebel, confesses, "I have sinned," when his iniquity is brought to light (Josh. 7:20); David the penitent believer confesses "I have sinned," as he owns to his perverseness (II Sam. 19:20); Nehemiah, the humble servant, includes himself in the sin of the nation in his "I have sinned" (Neh. 1:6); Job, the emptied saint, acknowledged his iniquity in his "I have sinned" (Job 7:20); Micah, the self-condemned, says, "I have sinned," as he ponders the righteousness of Jehovah (Micah 7:9); Judas, the wicked betrayer, throws down his ill-gotten gain at the feet of the priests, as he remorsefully exclaims "I have sinned" (Matt. 27:4); the absolute bankrupt prodigal says to his Father, "I have sinned," as he comes in repentance to Him (Luke 15:21); and we are assured by the Spirit that the Lord is on the lookout to bless those, who will honestly and truly confess "I have sinned" (Job. 33:27).

VII The Believer Knows the Fact of Sin.

Among the many things which Paul says: "I know" is, "I know that in me dwelleth no good thing" (Rom. 7:18).

NOTE—Luther says, "I am more afraid of my own heart than of the pope with all his cardinals." He who knows most of God, knows most about himself. Many like Hume and others are complacent in their self-esteem, while men like Fenelon, Fletcher, Edwards and Spurgeon, always write bitter things against themselves. When the Apostle says, "I know," he represents what had come to him by personal view and acquaintance. The word "know" is rendered "saw" in Acts 3:9. "Beheld" in Luke 19:41, "look" in John 7:52, "considered" in Acts 15:6, "perceiving" in Luke 9:47, and "aware" in Luke 11:44. The believer has seen the evil of sin and loathes it, he beholds the havoc of sin and avoids it, he looks into the heart of sin and distrusts it, he considers the tendency of sin and judges it, he perceives the allurements of sin and conquers it, and he is aware of the existence of sin and dies to it in the fellowship of Christ's death. This is the doctrine of sin as a state which answers to the experience of religious men. At a primitive state of advancement, indeed, just as in childhood, men repent of what they have done; but at a more mature stage they repent of what they are."

C. The Nature of Sin.

The nature of sin is expressed in the words which the Spirit uses to describe it. Girdlestone says of those words, "Every word is a piece of philosophy; nay it is a revelation."

I Sin Means to Miss the Mark of the Divine Standard.

God's standard is expressed in the letter of His holy law, and in the living characters of the life of His holy Son. From both of these standards all have sinned, that is, missed the mark.

NOTE 1—The word "Hamartano," translated "sinned" in Rom. 3:23, is rendered "trespass" in Matt. 18:15, "offended" in Acts 25:8, and "faults" in I Pet. 2:20; and in the following illustrative examples it is given "sin" and "sinned."

- Judas missed the mark of love to Christ in betraying Him. Matt. 27:4.
- The prodigal missed the mark of contentment in the father's will by having his own will: Luke 15:18, 21.
- The impotent man missed the mark of God's law in sinning against himself: John 5:14.
- The adulterous woman missed the mark of purity by her sin: John 8:11.
- The angels missed the mark of God's glory by their pride: II Pet. 2:4.
- Israel missed the mark of God's rest by their unbelief: Heb. 3:17.
- The sinner misses the mark of God's salvation by refusing Christ in His atonement: Heb. 10:26.
- The heretic misses the mark of God's truth by his error: Tit. 3:11.

NOTE 2—The equivalent Old Testament word "Chata" is equally expressive. The word, variously rendered in the following passages, as indicated in the italicized words, and the additional scriptural example, will illustrate.

—To sin is to miss an aim. The word is rendered "miss" in speaking of the left-handed Benjamites who did not "miss" the mark in the slinging of stones (Judges 20:16). The anathema of Jehovah came upon Ahab who "made Israel to sin," namely, in swerving from the aim of God's service (I Kings 21:22).

—To sin is to miss one's step and so trip and fall. The one that "hasteth with his feet sinneth" (Prov. 19:2). He does not consider where he is going and comes to grief. Israel, in their haste, missed the mark of God's commandment in eating the cattle with the blood in them; hence, it was told to Saul, "Behold the people sin against the Lord" (I Sam. 14:33).

—To sin is to miss happiness. Job's friend said to him all would be right if he were right. He would "visit his habitation and shalt not sin," as R. V. "miss nothing" (Job 5:24). The Psalmist felt if God's truth was hid in his heart he would not "sin" against the Lord (Psa. 119:11). To sin against the God of happiness is to miss the happiness of God.

—To sin is to miss one's self. The mighty are scared out of their wits at the approach of leviathan. "By reason of his breakings they are beside themselves" (Job. 41:25, R. V.). The sinner is the same, he misses the mark of God's sane command and rushes on in his insanity like Pharaoh, who "sinned" yet more (Ex. 9:34).

—To sin is to miss another's good will. Pharaoh's butler and baker "offended" him, hence they were dismissed from their office and imprisoned (Gen. 40:1). The cause of Jehovah's displeasure with Israel in allowing them to be defeated by Ai was the sin of Achan, hence His sharp reprimand to Joshua, "Israel hath sinned;" and when Achan confessed "I have sinned" and was judged, then all was adjusted (Josh. 7:11, 20).

—To sin is to miss the right path. Balaam knew he was on the wrong road. When the angel arrested him he exclaimed, "I have sinned . . . I will get me back again" (Num. 22:34). David felt the same in his sin with Bathsheba, hence his penitential cry, "I have sinned against Thee" (Psa. 51:4).

—To sin is to miss God. The words "to sin" in Gen. 31:39 is rendered, "bare the loss." Jacob told Laban he bare the loss of the sheep which were torn by the beasts. What a loss it is to bear when one misses God, as He Himself says, "He that sinneth (or 'misseth' Me, R. V.) against Me wrongeth His own soul" (Prov. 8:36).

—To sin is thus to miss the divine aim in life and to miss God's intention for us is to miss God Himself, and to miss Him is to forsake the Fountain of Living Waters and thus miss everything.

II Sin is a Deviation, a Lapse, ■ Falling Aside from God's Requirement.

The word rendered "trespass" in Matt. 6:14 "paraptoma" is translated "sins" in Eph. 1:7; 2:1, 5; "offence" in Rom. 5:15, 16, 17, 18, 20; "fault" in Gal. 6:1; Jas. 5:16; and "fall" in Rom. 11:11. As a man who slips aside from the path falls into the ditch to his hurt; so the sinner by his deviation from the will of God has lapsed from the truth and trespassed against the God of Truth.

NOTE—Every offence against God's Word means a fall from God, and damage to us and to others. See the word "offence" in Rom. 4:25; 5:15, 16, 17, 18, 20.

Every departure from God means a fall from the Divine purpose. See what the Spirit says about the "fall" of Israel in Rom. 11:11, 12.

Every sin committed is a medium to convey spiritual death and condemnation. See the description of the condition of the Colossian and Ephesian believers before conversion: Col. 2:13; Eph. 2:1, 5.

Every slip from the path of right and duty is damaging to the one who slips. See the word "fault" in Gal. 6:1, and Jas. 5:16.

Every trespass is a falling aside from God Himself, and is an affront to Him, which He alone can forgive, but which he does when He acts in grace, for He "forgives our trespasses" through the blood of Christ's satisfying and vicarious death. See the words "trespass" and "sins" in Matt. 6:15; II Cor. 5:19; Eph. 1:7; Col. 2:13.

III Sin is a Distortion, a Perversion, a Bending of That Which is Right, and Thus making it Crooked.

The Hebrew "avah" corresponds to our word "wrong" namely, that which is wrung out of its course.

NOTE—

"For gold his sword the hireling ruffian draws,
For gold the hireling judge distorts the laws."

Johnson completely illustrates the wrong use of the sword and the evil course of a judge who uses a good law for a wrong end. Ruskin gives the same thought—"Every right action and true thought sets the seal of its beauty on person and face; every wrong action and foul thought its seal of distortion." "Avah" is rendered "Done wrong" in Esther 1:16, "Did perversely" in II Sam. 19:19, "Done wickedly" in II Sam. 24:17, "Done amiss" in II Chron. 6:37, and "Committed iniquity" in Psa. 106:6. The setting of these translations gives interesting illustrations. Vashti did "wrong" in the estimation of Memucan in not obeying the command of Ahasuerus; David confessed he had "done wickedly" when he numbered the people; Shimei owned he "did perversely" in the way he cursed David and threw stones at him. Solomon in his dedicatory prayer tells the Lord that those who come back to Him in real repentance and confess they have "done amiss" will be forgiven; the Psalmist in the extremity of his suffering exclaimed, "I am troubled" (margin "bent"); Jeremiah in his anguish lamented to the Lord and said, "He hath made my paths crooked;" the prophet Isaiah was so burdened with God's message that he was like a woman "bowed down" with travail; and the Psalmist acknowledges as he thinks of the sins of his fathers, "We have committed iniquity."

The words which in the New Testament accord to the Old Testament "Avah," are "adikia" and "adikos." "Adikia" is derived from "adikos." The latter is rendered "unjust," "unrighteous," and the former is translated "iniquity," "unjust," "unrighteous," and "wrong." The character of the ungodly is wrong and they are, therefore, designated again and again as the "unjust" and "unrighteous" (Matt. 5:45; Luke 18:11; Acts 24:15; I Cor. 6:9; I Peter 3:18; 2:2, 9); and the course of life and specific acts of the ungodly are described as "unrighteous," hence the professor is a worker of "iniquity" (Luke 13:27), the steward in the parable is "unjust" in his methods (Luke 16:8), the field purchased by the blood money of Judas is "the reward of iniquity" (Acts 1:18), Simon Magus was held in the "bond of iniquity" (Acts 8:23), the reprobate are filled with all "unrighteousness" (Rom. 1:18), the sinner yields his members as "instruments of unrighteousness" (Rom. 6:13), the Satan-dominated have "pleasure in unrighteousness" (II Thess. 2:12), the tongue is a "world of iniquity" (Jas. 3:6), the unclean liver will receive the "reward of unrighteousness" (II Pet. 2:15), and "all unrighteousness" is summarized as "sin" (I John 5:17). One of the most terrible phases of sin is that men should bend the right to wrong purpose, as Judah did when they took the serpent of brass and worshipped it instead of God (II Kings 18:4), to take a position of trust to gain sordid dust of gold, as Balaam did (Jude 11), to use the name of the Lord to carry out one's own will as King Saul did (I Sam. 15:16-23), to use God's labels for the devil's merchandise as professors do when they turn the grace of God into lasciviousness (Jude 4), to be associated with God's people for selfish ends, as Achan was when he took God's devoted things and devoted them to himself (Josh 7:20, 21), to desire the power of God to add to self's exaltation, as Simon Magus wanted to do (Acts 8:18-23) and to be in the company of the Lord and His own, to betray them and Him to the enemy, as Judas did (Acts 1:17).

IV Sin is the Passing Over the Prescribed Boundary of God's Law, Hence it is Transgression.

Bickersteth uses the word transgress in the sense of passing over, in calling attention to the impassability of the fixed gulf between the righteous and the wicked.

NOTE—

"Nor can the foot
Of disembodied Spirit, nor angel wing,
Transgress the deep inexorable gulf
Betwixt the worlds of darkness and of light."

What the residents of the unseen world cannot do, the sinner does in his sinning, for he passes over the boundary of right and enters the forbidden land of wrong.

The Hebrew word "avar" is used in a variety of connections. It is rendered "pass over" in describing Israel's passage through Jordan's bed (Josh. 3:16), "passed through" in referring to Abram's pilgrimage (Gen. 12:6), "current" in speaking of the money which Abraham passed to Ephron (Gen. 23:16), "passeth" in alluding to the Eastern custom of shepherds counting their sheep as they passed under the rod (Lev. 27:32), "went over" in stating the fact that a ferry boat carried the king's household over Jordan (II Sam. 19:18), "passed through" in using the simile of a river going through a district (Isa. 23:10), and "pass" in denoting the fact that the sea does not pass the command of the Lord (Prov. 8:29).

God's word of restriction is, "Thus far thou shalt go and no farther," but man says, "So far shall I go and as much farther as I like." Balaam recognized God's authority when he said, "I cannot go beyond the Word of the Lord" (Num. 22:18; 24:13), but King Saul did not recognize God's authority, for when he was found out in his disobedience he said, "I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord" (I Sam. 15:24). Frequently God charged Israel with having transgressed His law (See Num. 14:41; Josh. 7:11, 15; Isa. 24:5; Dan. 9:11; Hosea 6:7; 8:1).

The New Testament word for "transgress" ("Parabaino") is a compound one, meaning to step on one side, to go aside from what is prescribed. The Pharisees by their question charged the disciples with transgressing, when they said to Christ, "Why do Thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders?" But Christ retorted, "Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?" (Matt. 15:2, 3). Judas by his "transgression" fell from the apostleship (Acts 1:25), and he who does not abide in the teaching of Christ "transgresseth" (R. V. "goeth onward") and does not possess God (II John 9).

V Sin is an Affront to God, that is, Man Dares to Stand in God's Presence and Rebel Against Him.

NOTE—Cowper says:

"A moral, sensible and well-bred man
Will not affront me, and no other can."

But since man is ill-bred, he can do no other than affront the Lord. One of the most pathetic charges of God against Israel is, "I have brought up children and they have rebelled against Me" (Isa. 1:2); and He has to say of men generally, "they have added rebellion unto their sin" (Job. 34:37). The Hebrew word "Pasha" is rendered "rebellion" and "rebelled" in the Scriptures cited above, and it is given "offend" in Prov. 18:19; "trespass" in Gen. 31:36; 50:17; "sin" and "sins" in Prov. 10:12, 19; 28:13; "transgression" in I Kings 8:50; "revolted" in II Kings 8:20; and "rebelled" in I Kings 12:19. Professor Gracey in contrasting this word "avar" says, "With 'avar,' the law, the command or covenant intervened, and it is with this man comes into collision; but with 'pasha' even the law is removed, and man confronts God face to face." Mary Edgeworth in speaking of one of her characters says of him, "He became a little surly rebel who took pleasure in doing exactly the contrary to everything that he was desired to do." For a child to disobey his parent is bad, but for a child to clench his fist and defy his parent to his face is worse. That is what the wilful sinner does.

Corresponding and equivalent words in the New Testament are "Anomos" and "Asebes." "Anomos" is rendered "transgressors," "wicked," "without law," "lawless," and "unlawful." Thus the two thieves were "transgressors" against lawful authority (Mark 15:28); the action of the Jews, in unjustly putting Christ to death with "wicked" hands, was unlawful (Acts 2:23); those who are "without law" in the Jewish sense are nevertheless under responsibility to God (I Cor. 9:21); when Christ is revealed from Heaven He will destroy the "wicked" (lawless) one who has dared to oppose him (II Thess. 2:8); the law is restrictive and punitive to those who are "lawless," and who are in rebellion against God (I Tim. 1:9), and Lot is said to have been vexed with the "unlawful" deeds of the Sodomites (II Pet. 2:8).

"Asebes" signifies those who are irreverent, impious, ungodly. It is translated "ungodly" in the nine places where it occurs. See Rom. 4:5; 5:6; I Tim. 1:9; I Pet. 4:18; II Pet. 2:5; II Pet. 2:7; Jude 4, 15. A man without God is godless. Anything less than God puts one among the godless, and thus ungodly, and to be without Him means to be in opposition to Him, no matter what the label may be upon the godless one.

VI Sin is the Betrayal of a Trust, Unfaithfulness.

The native meaning of the word "ma'al" is to cover, and thence to act covertly, to deal treacherously. "To his sin, man has added transgression; to his transgression, revolt; and to his revolt, he has joined treachery."

NOTE—Adam missed the mark when he listened to Eve instead of God; he transgressed when he disobeyed the definite command of God and took the forbidden fruit; and then he covered up his sin by his after action. The Spirit emphasizes this fact in the following words, "But they like Adam have transgressed the covenant; there have they dealt treacherously against Me" (Hosea 6:7, R. V.). Job also says, "If I covered my transgression as Adam by hiding mine iniquity in my bosom" (Job 31:33).

The word "ma'al" is rendered "trespass" in Josh. 7:1, in referring to the covered sin of Achan; "transgression" in I Chron. 10:13, in calling attention to the cause of Saul's untimely death; "sore" in II Chron. 28:19, in describing the intensity of Ahaz's sin for he "transgressed sore" or he "transgressed a transgression;" "falsehood" in Job 21:34, when Job charged his friends with "falsehood" or faithlessness (margin); "grievously" in Ezek. 14:13, in God's charge against those who had "sinned against Him by trespassing grievously;" and "very" in II Chron. 36:14, when the Lord calls attention to the lengths of sin into which the rulers of Judah had gone.

To sin in a general way is bad, to break a distinct command is worse, but to cover up the sin is worst of all. It was this last act which brought the scathing words of Christ against the Pharisees, for they "for a pretence" or "cloke" made long prayers (Matt. 23:14). To prate well in prayer and to be ill in practice is to be a whited sepulchre of death.

VII Sin is an Offence, an Error, a Negligence.

As "Chata" denotes sins of commission, so "Asham" designates sins of omission. It is found in connection with the trespass-offering, which was for sins of ignorance (see the word "trespass-offering" in Leviticus). Its original application is to negligence in going, carelessness of gait, as of a faltering, jaded, slow-paced camel, who saunters along without regard to its steps. The word comes from a root which means to be in fault, hence, to be guilty, and is rendered "guilty" in Num. 5:6; "offend" in Hab. 1:11; "desolate" in Psa. 34:21; "trespass" in II Chron. 19:10; and "found faulty" in Hosea 10:2. Again and again the fact is stated, that a man's ignorance of an offence did not absolve him from the guilt of it. "Though he wist it not, yet is he guilty." See Lev. 4:13, 22, 27; 5:2, 3, 4, 17, 19 R. V.; 6:4.

NOTE—Some of the most terrible punishments mentioned in the Word, are given because of ignorance and negligence. Meroz is cursed because help was not given the Lord (Judges 5:23): "Let him be anathema maranatha, accursed when the Lord comes," is the predictive announcement to those who "love not the Lord" (I Cor. 16:22); "everlasting punishment" will be the portion of those who did not minister to Christ's brethren (Matt. 25:45, 46); "everlasting destruction" will be the lot of those who know not God and who have not obeyed the Gospel (II Thess. 1:8, 9); and those who do not believe in Christ are convicted by the Spirit of this sin of sins: "of sin because they believe not in Me" (John 16:9).

VIII Sin is a Debt, a Failure in Duty, a not Meeting One's Obligations to God.

Christ taught the disciples to pray, "Forgive us our debts" (Matt. 6:12). The word "debts" ("Opheilema") comes from a word which means something owing, a due, to be under obligation. It is rendered "owed" in stating what the two debtors owed (Luke 7:41); "indebted" in Luke's version of the Lord's prayer (Luke 11:4); "duty" in speaking of the fulfillment of commands. (Luke 17:10); "ought," when Christ enjoins the disciples to wash each other's feet (John 13:14) "behooved" in referring to the necessity of Christ's becoming like to us in order to benefit us (Heb. 2:17); and "bound" when Paul felt he was bound to thank God for the saints at Thessalonica (II Thess. 2:13).

NOTE—Failure to discharge duty means a liability. When the unforgiving servant had his forgiveness cancelled, he was delivered to the tormentors till he had paid all that was due from him (Matt. 18:34). The unforgiven sinner whose obligations are not met, has hanging over him all the dread consequences of what Christ indicated when He referred to the Galilean sinners who met with such an untimely death under Pilate, and said: "Think ye that they were debtors" (Margin, R. V.), above all men that dwell in Jerusalem? I tell you, nay; but, except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:1-5).

Dr. Bullinger says, "Sin is called debt, because it involves expiation, and the payment of it as a debt by punishment and satisfaction." Thus sin as a debt reminds us of what man ought to give to God, and what he is still under obligation to render to Him.

IX Sin is Disobedience, Distrust, Unbelief, a Want of Response to God.

All the other words we have considered depict sin before it comes in contact with the Divine remedy, but the words translated "disobedience" (Col. 3:6) "unbelief" (Heb. 4:6), "obey not" (Rom. 2:8), and "believed not" (Heb. 11:31), represent man's disobedience to God's salvation.

NOTE 1—Disobedience is a Satan-annexer (Eph 2:2), a wrath-bringer (Eph. 5:6), a life-robber (John 3:36, R. V.), a prejudice-producer (Acts 14:2, R. V.), a heart-hardener (Acts 19:9, R. V.), a God-ignorner (Rom. 10:21, a rest-destroyer (Heb. 3:18, R. V.), a Christ-stumbler (I Pet. 2:7, 8), a prison-opener (I Pet. 3:20), and a certain-punisher (I Pet. 4:17). There is no sin so grievous as the sin which is represented by unwillingness to be persuaded by the love of God, and which in its wilfulness opposes God's gracious purpose in Christ. "Were it sin against law, we might imagine the law too severe; or, against rule, we might find an excuse in its sternness; or, against power, we might possibly find an apology in its despotic severity. There remains, however, no such palliation of this sin of disobedience, for unlike all other forms of sin, it springs into being, and confronts God, when He stoops in His gentleness to raise the poor and needy. It is the beggar's refusal of heavenly blessing; it is the stubbornness of man that will not yield to God's way of blessing; it is the scorn of Eternal love, Love's sacrifice, and Love's sweet reasonableness; it is the thrice-ribbed ice of sin that will not melt beneath the warm beam of heavenly pity; it is the triple steel that will not be pierced by the golden headed arrows of mercy; and the adamant that will neither rend nor dissolve at the expiring cry of the Son of God."

D. The Culpability of Sin.

By Culpability is meant the blameworthiness of sin as an act, inexcusable on the part of its perpetrator, who being such a personality as he is, endowed with such faculties as are his, placed under a law so good and holy, just and spiritual, simple and easy as that prescribed by God, and having such motives and inducements to keep it as were offered to him—to the first man and also to his posterity,—ought never to have committed it. It also includes the heinousness of sin, as an act done against light and love bestowed upon the doer of it, and in flagrant opposition to the holiness and majesty of the Law-giver so that He, the Law-giver, cannot but regard it with abhorrence as an act abominable in His sight, and repel from His presence as well as extrude from His favor the individual who has become chargeable with it. But over and above these representations of sin which are all Scriptural, by the culpability of sin is intended its exposure to the penalty affixed by Divine justice to transgression.

NOTE—That a penalty was affixed by God in the first instance when man was created, the Eden narrative in Genesis declares: "The Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:16); and that this penalty still overhangs the impenitent is not only distinctly implied in our Saviour's language, that apart from His redeeming work the world, i.e., every individual therein, was in danger of perishing and was indeed already condemned (John 3:16-18); but it is expressly declared by John who says, that "the wrath of God abideth" on the unbeliever (3:36) and by Paul who asserts that "the wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23).

Without entering on the vexed question as to how far Adam's posterity are legally responsible for Adam's sin, in the sense that apart from their own transgressions they would be adjudged to spiritual and eternal death, it is manifest that Scripture includes in the just punishment of sin more than the death of the body. That this does form part of sin's penalty can hardly be disputed by a careful reader of the Bible, but equally that that penalty includes what theologians call spiritual and eternal death, Scripture unmistakably implies. When it affirms that men are naturally "dead in trespasses and in sins," it obviously purposes to convey the idea that until the soul is quickened by Divine grace it is incapable, not of thinking upon the subject of religion, or reading the Word of God, or of praying, or of exercising faith, but of doing anything spiritually good or religiously saving, of securing their legal justification before a holy God, or of bringing about their spiritual regeneration. When Scripture further asserts that the unbeliever shall not see life (John 3:36), and that the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment (Matt. 25:46), it assuredly does not suggest that on entering the other world the unsaved of earth will have another opportunity of accepting salvation (Second Probation), or that extinction of being will be their lot (Annihilation), or that all mankind will eventually attain salvation (Universalism). Meanwhile it suffices to observe that the words just quoted seem to teach that the penalty of sin continues beyond the grave. Granting that the words of Christ about the worm that never dies and the fire that shall not be quenched are figurative, they unquestionably signify that the figures stand for some terrible calamity,—on the one hand, loss of happiness, separation from the source of life, exclusion from blessedness; and, on the other, access of misery, suffering, wretchedness, woe, which will be realized by the wicked as the due reward of their impenitent and disobedient lives, and which no revolving years will relieve. The pendulum of the great clock of eternity, as it swings through the ages, will seem to be ever saying: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still."

E. The Consequence of Sin.

Sin has dulled the ears of man's attention (Acts 28:27), darkened the eyes of man's understanding (Eph. 4:18), depraved the heart of man's affection (Matt. 13:15), diverted the feet of man's walk (Isa. 53:6), carnalized the thought of man's mind (Rom. 8:7), warped the capacity of man's intellect (I Cor. 2:9-14), wronged the soul of man's nature (Prov. 8:36), poisoned the tongue of man's speech (Rom. 3:13, 14), contracted the hands of man's labor (Prov. 21:25), deathized the spirit of man's being (Rom. 5:12), deprived man of the comfort of God's home (Luke 15:32), and sin has placed him in the devil's grip of power (Eph. 2:2).

There are two words which sum up the consequence of sin, namely, pollution and penalty.

I Pollution.

Man in his sin is compared:—

1. To an adder for his venom (Psa. 140:3).
2. To an ass for his stubbornness (Job. 11:12).
3. To a bear for his cruelty (Dan. 7:5).
4. To a canker-worm for his destructiveness (Joel 2:25).
5. To a dog for his uncleanness (Prov. 26:11).
6. To a dragon for his desolateness (Job 30:29).
7. To a fox for his cunning (Luke 13:32).
8. To a leopard for his fierceness (Dan. 7:6).
9. To a lion for his ravening (Psa. 22:13).
10. To a moth for his frailty (Job. 27:18).
11. To a sheep for his stupidity (Isa. 53:6).
12. To a spider's web for its flimsiness (Isa. 59:5).
13. To a swine for his filthiness (II Pet. 2:22).
14. To a viper for his poison (Matt. 23:33).
15. To a wolf for his ferociousness (John 10:12).

Every part of man's nature has come under sin's fell swoop.

II Penalty.

The penalty of sin may be summed up under seven words, namely: "death," "lost," "condemnation," "guilt," "perdition," "punishment," "eternal."

1. "Death" is the Denotative Word.

Death means separation. Physical death is the separation of the spirit from the body (Jas. 2:26), spiritual death is the separation of man from God (Rom. 5:12; 6:23; John 5:24; I John 3:14; Luke 15:24; I Tim. 5:6; Rev. 3:1); and the second death is eternal separation from God (Jas. 1:15; 5:20; Rev. 20:14; 21:8).

NOTE—Death is said to have "passed upon all men." The word "passed" in Rom. 5:12, signifies "to go through," "to pierce through," and "to pass through," and is so rendered in Matt. 19:24 in speaking of the impossibility of a camel "to go through" a needle's eye, in Luke 2:35, where Simeon with prophetic insight tells Mary that a sword would "pierce through" her own soul because of the Christ, and I Cor. 10:1, where reference is made to Israel, who "passed through" the Red Sea. Death because of sin, has passed through man's nature and deathized every part of it, and unless he receives life, the death-state will culminate in the second death. The hell state is the continuation of the sin state (Rev. 20:14, 15). To be separated from all God is, Christ was and is, and the Holy Spirit can give, is hell indeed.

2. "Lost" is the Descriptive Word.

The word "apollumi" means to lose utterly. It is translated "destroy," "die," "lose," "lost," "marred," "perish."

For God to "destroy" in hell, is man's loss of heaven (Matt. 10:28),

To "die" is to lose one's earthly existence (John 18:14).

To live for self is to "lose" the life in uselessness (Luke 9:24).

For the wine skins to be "marred" is to lose their service (Mark 2:22).

To "perish" is to lose God's salvation (John 3:16).

To be "lost" is to lose God and one's self (Luke 15:17, 24).

NOTE—Sin has placed man in the condition described as "lost." Man is lost like a strayed sheep, like the piece of silver in the dust from the headgear of the woman, and like the prodigal son in the far country (Luke 15:4, 6, 8, 9, 17, 24, 32). Christ came to seek and to save the lost (Matt. 18:11; Luke 19:10); and God gave Christ that man might not perish (John 3:16; II Pet. 3:9); but the sinner will find that God is able to "destroy" him if he does not repent (Matt. 10:28). There are two thoughts wrapped up in the word "lost," what God loses, and what man loses. The sheep lost the shepherd and the fold, and the shepherd lost the sheep; the piece of silver lost the position it occupied, and the woman lost her ornament; the prodigal lost the father's home, money, food, clothes, and protection; and the father lost his son. Sin robs God from man, and man from God.

3. "Condemnation" is the Judicial Word.

The words translated "condemnation" have a shade of meaning which it will be well to state.

- (1) "Krisis" signifies a judicial decision and is rendered "judgment" (Matt. 11:22, 24; II Pet. 2:4, 9; 3:7; I John 4:17; Jude 6); "accusation" (Jude 9); "damnation" (Matt. 23:33; Mark 3:29; John 5:29); and "condemnation" (John 3:19; 5:24).

NOTE—God's judgment against sin has been given, especially against the sin of non-belief in Christ (John 3:19; 16:8), and His final decision, when men will be judged according to their deeds, will be at the Day of Judgment. The day of crisis is passed for the believer, for God's Word is "Shall not come into condemnation" (John 5:24); but for the ungodly, God is reserving them "unto the day of judgment to be punished" (II Pet. 2:9).

- (2) "Katakrino" means to give judgment, the passing of the sentence upon the sinner, hence, to condemn the crime, the punishment following being implied.

NOTE—The word is rendered "damnation" in Mark 16:16, and "condemn" in the above sense, in Matt. 27:3; Rom. 8:3; I Cor. 11:32. Where there is no sin there is no judgment passed, but judgment must be passed upon sin and its sentence carried out where sin exists.

4. "Guilt" is the Indicative Word.

There are two words rendered "guilty." The one means to be held in, to be detained by the lawful authority because of a charge made, hence in danger of having a penalty inflicted.

- (1) "Enockos" is translated "in danger of" in Matt. 5:21-22; "subject to" in Heb. 2:15; and "guilty" in Matt. 26:66; I Cor. 11:27; Jas. 2:10.
- (2) The other word "Hupodikos" means a great deal more. It takes one to the prisoner as he is under sentence. The word only occurs in Rom. 3:19, and in the margin it is given, "subject to the judgment of God." The sinner because of his sin, is not on probation, but under condemnation.

5. "Perdition" is the Prospective Word.

This word points on to the irretrievable ruin of those who die in their sins. The word "apoleia" is rendered "destruction" in Matt. 7:13; Rom. 9:22; Phil. 3:19; II Pet. 3:16; "waste" in Matt. 26:8; "die," in Acts 25:16; "damnation" in II Pet. 2:3; "pernicious" in II Pet. 2:2; and "perdition" in John 17:12; Phil. 1:28; II Thess. 2:3; Heb. 10:39; II Pet. 3:7; Rev. 17:8, 11.

NOTE—Judas complained at the "waste" of the precious ointment that Mary poured on Christ, but he became a "son of waste" by his conduct. The words "waste" and "perdition" are one and the same.

6. "Punishment" is the Conscious Word.

Christ will say to the goats in the day of judgment, "Depart ye into everlasting punishment" (Matt. 25:46). The word "Kolasis" means penal infliction and comes from a word which means to prune, to dwarf, to curtail, to chastise. It is rendered "torment" in I John 4:18.

NOTE—There is a whole volume of meaning in two words. "Paidia" is the word used for Fatherly chastisement (Heb. 12:5), and "Kolasis" is applied to the judicial punishment of the wicked. The former is never applied to the wicked; the latter is never applied to the righteous.

"The nature of punishment must be looked for in other parts of the Scripture as being there clearly defined as a result and not a process. Eternal punishment is an expression analogous to "eternal judgment" (not judging), eternal redemption (not redeeming), eternal salvation (not saving), namely, the eternal effect of an act, here an act of punishment." "The wrath of God abideth" (John 3:36) on the unbeliever, therefore eternal punishment implies those who are eternally punished, are eternally existent. Punishment implies an object to punish. If there are no law-breakers in prison, there are no law-administrators in action.

7. "Eternal" is the Durative Word.

One cannot escape the doctrine of eternal punishment without lowering the standard of inspiration.

NOTE—One inspired word, the Greek adjective "aiónios," embodies the whole truth. It is used in seven senses in the New Testament.

- (1) To the Father as the "Eternal God" (Rom. 16:26).
- (2) To Christ as the "Eternal Life" (I John 5:20).
- (3) To the Spirit as the "Eternal Spirit" (Heb. 9:14).
- (4) To the "past times eternal" (Rom. 16:25; II Tim. 1:9; Titus 1:2).
- (5) To the "eternal Gospel" (Rev. 14:6).
- (6) To the believer in Christ, who possesses "eternal life" (John 3:15); who is secured in "an eternal covenant" (Heb. 13:20); who is saved in an "eternal salvation" (Heb. 5:9); who is liberated in an "eternal redemption" (Heb. 9:12); who is called to "eternal glory" (I Pet. 5:10); who is kept for an "eternal inheritance" (Heb. 9:15); who is cheered by "eternal comfort" (II Thess. 2:16); who is assured of "an eternal weight of glory" (II Cor. 4:17); who should be thinking of "eternal habitations" (Luke 16:9); and be aiming at an abundant entrance into the "eternal Kingdom" II Pet. 1:11).
- (7) To the unbeliever in his doom, who is said to be cast into "eternal fire" (Matt. 18:8; 25:41; Jude 7); to be under the sentence of "eternal judgment" (Heb. 6:2); because of eternal sin (Mark 3:29, R. V.), which means "eternal destruction" (II Thess. 1:9), and "everlasting punishment" (Matt. 25:46).

We sow a thought, and reap a word; we sow a word, and reap an act; we sow an act, and reap a habit; we sow a habit, and reap a character; and we sow a character, and reap a destiny. "Sin impresses a character in us, and that is complete; but sin also obligates action, and that goes on to eternal ages."

F. The Universality of Sin.

According to the Bible, sin is not a quality or condition of soul that has revealed itself only in exceptional individuals like notorious offenders—prodigals, profligates, criminals, and vicious persons generally; or in exceptional circumstances, as for instance in the early ages of man's existence on the earth, or among half developed races, or in lands where the arts and sciences are unknown, or in civilized communities where the local environment is prejudicial to morality; but different from this sin is a quality or condition of soul which exists in every child of woman born, and not merely at isolated times but at all times, and at every stage of his career, though not always manifesting itself in the same forms of thought, feeling, word and action in every individual or even in the same individual.

I Extensively.

It has affected the whole race of man in every age from the beginning of the world downward, in every land beneath the sun, in every race into which mankind has been divided, in every situation in which the individual has found himself placed.

NOTE—Scripture utters no uncertain sound on the world-embracing character of moral corruption, saying in the pre-diluvian age of the world that "all flesh had corrupted its way upon the earth" (Gen 6:12); in David's generation, that all mankind had "gone aside and become filthy," so that "there was none that did good, no, not one" (Psa. 14:3); in Isaiah's time, that "all we like sheep had gone astray and turned every one to his own way" (53:6); in the opening of the Christian era, that "all had sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 2:23); and generally Solomon's verdict holds good of every day, "There is no man that sinneth not" (I Kings 8:46), not even the best of men who have been born again by the Spirit and the incorruptible seed of the Word of God, renewed in their minds and created anew in Christ Jesus. Even of these one writer says: "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (I John 1:8); while another counsels Christians to mortify the deeds of the body, and to put off the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts of the flesh (Rom. 7:13; Col. 3:5-10); and a third asserts that "in many things we all offend" (James 3:2). How true this is may be learned from the fact that Scripture mentions only one person in Whom there was no sin, viz., Jesus of Nazareth. But besides Him not a single person figures on the page of Holy Writ of whom it is said, or indeed could have been said, that he was sinless. Neither Enoch nor Noah in the ante-diluvian age; neither Abraham nor Isaac in patriarchal times; neither Moses nor Aaron in the years of the Israelitish wanderings; neither David nor Jonathan in the days of the undivided monarchy; neither Peter nor John, neither Barnabas nor Paul, in the Apostolic age, could have claimed such a distinction; and these were some of the best men that have ever appeared on this planet.

II Intensively.

In every individual, in every department and faculty of his nature, from the circumference to the center, or from the center to the circumference of his being.

NOTE—It is not a malady which has effected only one part of man's complex constitution: every part thereof has felt its baleful influence. It has darkened his understanding and made him unable, without supernatural illumination, to apprehend and appreciate spiritual things. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (I Cor. 2:14); and again, "The Gentiles walk in the vanity of their minds, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their hearts" (Eph. 4:17, 18). It defiles the heart, so that if left to itself, it becomes deceitful above all things and desperately wicked" (Jer. 17:9), so "full of evil" (Eccl. 9:3) and "only evil continually" (Gen. 6:5), that out of it proceed "evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications and such like" (Matt. 15:19), thus proving it to be a veritable cage of unclean birds. It paralyzes the will, if not wholly, at least partially, in every case, so that even regenerated souls have often to complain like

Paul that when they would do good evil is present with them, that they are carnal, sold under sin, that what they would they do not, and what they hate they do, that in their flesh, i.e., their sin polluted natures, dwelleth no good thing, and that while to will is present with them, how to perform that which is good they know not (Rom. 7:14-25). It dulls the conscience, that vicegerent of God in the soul, renders it less quick to detect the approach of evil, less prompt to sound a warning against it and sometimes so dead as to be past feeling about it (Eph. 4:19). In short there is not a faculty of the soul that is not injured by it. "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death" (James 1:5).

STUDY QUESTIONS ON HAMARTIALOLOGY

1. Describe the origin of sin under the following heads and quote proof texts where given: the entrance of sin into the angelic realm; the entrance of sin into the human race.
2. Show the difference in the Scripture writers' explanation of the entrance of sin into the angelic realm from that of the entrance of sin into the human race.
3. Give the meaning of "Original Sin" and quote passages which support it.
4. Discuss the fact of sin under the following heads: Nature proclaims it; Men acknowledge it; Law discovers it; God declares it; Christ reveals it; Experience proves it; The believer knows it.
5. Give some translations and illustrations of the New Testament word "Hamartano" and its Old Testament equivalent "Chata" which mean "to miss the mark."
6. Give some translations of the Greek word "Paraptonia" and show by scriptural illustrations that sin is a deviation, a lapse, a falling aside from God's requirement.
7. Give some translations and illustrations of Old Testament word "Avah" and its New Testament equivalents "Adikia" and "Adikos" which show sin to be a distortion, a perversion, a bending of that which is right and making it crooked.
8. Give some translations and illustrations of the Old Testament word "Avar" and its New Testament equivalent "Parabaino."
9. Give some translations and illustrations of the Old Testament word "pasha" and its New Testament equivalents "Anomos" and "Asebes" and also show the distinctive meaning of the Hebrew word "Pasha" as contrasted with "Avar."
10. Describe sin as the betrayal of a trust or unfaithfulness, giving illustrations from Old and New Testaments.
11. Give meaning of Old Testament word "Asham" as compared with "Chata" and also some translations and illustrations of its use and the punishment meted out to the forms of sin it denotes, namely, offense, error, negligence, both in Old Testament and New Testament.
12. Give translations and illustrations of the Greek word "Ophelema" and show what is involved in sin as a debt, a failure to duty, a not meeting one's obligation to God.
13. Describe sin as disobedience, distrust, unbelief, a want of response to God, giving translations of words with this significance, and illustrations of their use, showing the heinousness of this form of sin.
14. Describe the culpability of sin, showing from the note how it was recognized by God at the time of the fall, and by the Holy Spirit in various parts of the Scripture.

15. Give the various ways in which the consequence of sin is seen in its effect upon men in general and quote one passage with each.
16. Give some comparisons from Scripture showing man's pollution as a consequence of sin, with references.
17. Give the three-fold meaning of death as a penalty of sin, and illustrate the meaning of the phrase "death hath passed upon all men."
18. Give the meaning and translations of the Greek word for "lost," and give illustrations from Scripture of man's lost condition.
19. Give the meaning of condemnation as set forth under the two Greek words "Krisis" and "Katakrino" with their various translations.
20. Give the meaning of guilt as shown by the two Greek words "Enockos" and "Hupodikos" with their translations.
21. Give the meaning of perdition and the translation of the Greek word "Apoleia."
22. Give the meaning of "punishment" and show the distinction between the two Greek words "Kolasis" and "Paidia."
23. Give the seven-fold use of the Greek word "Aionios" which is translated "eternal" and "everlasting."
24. What is true of sin as a quality or condition of soul, negatively and positively, according to the Bible?
25. Describe the universality of sin extensively and give illustrative proofs from Scripture.
26. Describe the universality of sin intensively and give illustrative proofs from Scripture.

CHAPTER SEVEN

SOTERIOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF SALVATION

- A. ELECTION AND CALLING.
- B. UNION WITH CHRIST.
 - I. REGENERATION.
 - II. CONVERSION.
 - III. JUSTIFICATION.
 - IV. SANCTIFICATION.
 - V. PRAYER.

A. Election and Calling.I Election.*1. Definition.

Election is that eternal act of God by which, in His sovereign pleasure and on account of no foreseen merit in them, He chooses certain, out of a number of sinful men, to be the recipients of the special grace of His Spirit and so to be made voluntary part-takers of Christ's salvation.

2. Preliminary Statements.

The Scriptures forbid us to find the reasons for election in the moral action of man before the new birth, and refer us merely to the sovereign will and mercy of God; i. e., they teach the doctrine of personal election. Before taking up the proof of the doctrine, three preliminary statements should be made for which there is scriptural warrant.

- (1) God has a sovereign right to bestow more grace upon one subject than upon another,—grace being unmerited favor to sinners: Matt. 20:12-15; Rom. 9:20-21.
- (2) God has been pleased to exercise this right, in times past, in dealing with men: Psa. 147:20; Rom. 3:1, 2; John 15:16; Acts 9:15.
- (3) God has some other reason than that of saving as many as possible for the way in which He distributes His grace: Matt. 11:21; Rom. 9:22, 23.

3. Scriptural Proof of the Doctrine of Election.

- (1) Declarations are made of God's purpose to save certain individuals: Mark 13:27; Luke 18:7; Acts 13:48; Rom. 9:11-16; Eph. 1:4, 5, 9, 11; Col. 3:12; II Thess. 2:13.
- (2) Declarations are made of God's foreknowledge of those individuals whom He has purposed to save, whom He has made the object of His special attention and care: Rom. 8:27-30; I Pet. 1:1, 2; Gen. 18:19; Ex. 2:25; Psa. 1:6; Nahum 1:7; Matt. 7:23; I Cor. 8:3; Gal. 4:9; Rom. 11:2.
- (3) Declarations are made that God's choice of those who are to be saved is a matter of grace, or unmerited favor, bestowed in eternity past: Eph. 1:5-8; 2:8; II Tim. 1:9.
- (4) Declarations are made that the Father has given certain persons to the Son to be His peculiar possession: John 6:37; 17:2, 6, 9; Eph. 1:14; I Pet. 2:9.

- (5) Declarations are made that the uniting of believers to Christ is due wholly to God: John 6:44; 10:26; I Cor. 1:30.
- (6) Declarations are made that those who are written in the Lamb's book of life, and they only, shall be saved: Phil. 4:3; Rev. 20:15; 21:27.
- (7) Declarations are made of the fact that believers are made the recipients of a special call of God: Rom. 8:28, 30; 9:23, 24; 11:29; I Cor. 1:24-29; Gal. 1:15, 16; James 2:23.
- (8) Declarations are made that regeneration is effected, not by virtue of man's will, but of God's will: John 1:13; James 1:18. See also I John 4:10.
- (9) Declarations are made that repentance, faith, holiness, and good works are the gifts of God: Acts 5:31; 11:18; II Tim. 2:25. See also Psalms 51:10; John 6:65; Acts 15:8, 9; I Cor. 12:9; Gal. 5:22; Phil. 2:13; Eph. 6:23; John 3:8. "The Spirit breatheth where He wills, and thou (as a consequence) hearest His voice."—Bengel's Trans.; I Cor. 12:3; Titus 1:1; Eph. 1:4; 2:9, 10; I Pet. 1:2.

NOTE—These passages furnish an abundant and conclusive refutation, on the one hand, of the view that election is simply God's determination from eternity to provide an objective salvation for universal humanity; and, on the other hand, of the view that election is God's determination from eternity to save certain individuals upon the ground of their foreseen faith.

4. Proof from Reason.

- (1) What God does He has eternally purposed to do. Since He bestows special regenerating grace on some, He must have eternally purposed to bestow it,—in other words, must have chosen them to eternal life. Thus the doctrine of election is only a special application of the doctrine of decrees.
- (2) This purpose cannot be conditioned upon any merit or faith of those who are chosen, since there is no such merit,—faith itself being God's gift and foreordained by Him.

NOTE—Since man's faith is foreseen only as the result of God's work of grace, election proceeds rather upon foreseen unbelief. Faith, as the effect of election, cannot at the same time be the cause of election. There is an analogy between prayer and its answer, on the one hand, and faith and salvation on the other. God has decreed answer in connection with prayer, and salvation in connection with faith. But He does not change His mind when men pray or when they believe. As He fulfills His purpose by inspiring true prayer, so He fulfills His purpose by giving faith. Augustine: "He chooses us, not because we believe, but that we may believe; lest we should say that we first chose Him." (John 15:16; Rom. 9:16, 21).

- (3) The depravity of the human will is such that, without this decree to bestow special Divine influences upon some, all, without exception, would have rejected Christ's salvation after it was offered to them; and so all, without exception, must have perished. Election, therefore, may be viewed as a necessary consequence of God's decree to provide an objective redemption, if that redemption is to have any subjective result in human salvation.
- (4) The Doctrine of Election becomes more acceptable to reason when we remember: first, that God's decree is eternal, and in a certain sense is contemporaneous with man's belief in Christ; secondly, that God's decree to create involves the decree of all that in the exercise of man's freedom will follow; thirdly, that God's decree is the decree of Him who is all in all, so that our willing and doing is at the same time the working of Him who decrees our willing and doing.

NOTE—The whole question turns upon the initiative in human salvation: if this belongs to God, then, in spite of difficulties, we must accept the Doctrine of Election.

5. Objections to the Doctrine of Election.

- (1) It is unjust to those who are not included in this purpose of salvation.—Answer: Election deals, not simply with creatures, but with sinful, guilty, and condemned creatures. That any should be saved is a matter of pure grace and those who are not included in this purpose of salvation suffer only the due reward of their deeds. There is, therefore, no injustice in God's election. We may better praise God that He saves any, than charge Him with injustice because He saves so few.

NOTE—God can say to all men, saved or unsaved "Friend, I do thee no wrong...Is it not lawful for Me to do what I will with Mine own?" (Matt. 20:13, 15). The question is not whether a father will treat his children alike, but whether a sovereign must treat condemned rebels alike. It is not true that, because the governor pardons one convict from the penitentiary, he must, therefore, pardon all. When he pardons one, no injury is done to those who are left. But, in God's government, there is still less reason for objection; for God offers pardon to all. Nothing prevents men from being pardoned but their unwillingness to accept His pardon. Election is simply God's determination to make certain persons willing to accept it.

- (2) It represents God as partial in His dealings and a Respector of persons.—Answer: Since there is nothing in men that determines God's choice of one rather than another, the objection is invalid. It would equally apply to God's selection of certain nations, as Israel, and certain individuals, as Cyrus, to be recipients of special temporal gifts. If God is not to be regarded as partial in not providing a salvation for fallen angels, He cannot be regarded as partial in not providing a regenerating influence of His Spirit for the whole race of fallen men: Isa. 45:1, 4, 5; Luke 4:25-27; II Pet. 2:4; Psa. 44:3.

- (3) It represents God as arbitrary.—Answer: It represents God, not as arbitrary, but as exercising the free choice of a wise and sovereign will, in ways and for reasons which are inscrutable to us. To deny the possibility of such a choice is to deny God's personality. To deny that God has reasons for His choice is to deny His wisdom. The Doctrine of Election finds these reasons, not in men, but in God.
- (4) It tends to immorality, by representing men's salvation as independent of their own obedience.—Answer: The objection ignores the fact that the salvation of believers is ordained only in connection with their regeneration and sanctification, as means; and that the certainty of final triumph is the strongest incentive to strenuous conflict with sin. Plutarch: "God is the brave man's hope, and not the coward's excuse."
- (5) It inspires pride in those who think themselves elect.—Answer: This is possible only in the case of those who pervert the doctrine. On the contrary, its proper influence is to humble men. Those who exalt themselves above others, upon the ground that they are special favorites of God, have reason to question their election.
- (6) It discourages effort for the salvation of the impenitent, whether on their own part or on the part of others.—Answer: Since it is a secret decree, it cannot hinder or discourage such effort. On the other hand, it is a ground of encouragement, and so a stimulus to effort; for, without election, it is certain that all would be lost (cf. Acts 18:10). While it humbles the sinner, so that he is willing to cry for mercy, it encourages him also by showing him that some will be saved, and (since election and faith are inseparably connected) that he will be saved, if he will only believe. While it makes the Christian feel entirely dependent on God's power, in his efforts for the impenitent, it leads him to say with Paul that he "endures all things for the elects' sake, that they also may attain the salvation that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." (II Tim. 2:10).

NOTE—God's decree that the company on Paul's ship should be saved (Acts 27:24) did not obviate the necessity of their abiding in the ship (verse 31). In marriage, man's election does not exclude woman's; so God's election does not exclude man's. There is just as much need of effort as if there were no election. Hence the question for the sinner is not, "Am I one of the elect?" but rather, "What shall I do to be saved?"

- (7) The decree of election implies a decree of reprobation.—Answer: The decree of reprobation is not a positive decree, like that of election, but a permissive decree to leave the sinner to his self-chosen rebellion and its natural consequences of punishment.

NOTE—Election and sovereignty are only sources of good. Election is not a decree to destroy,—it is a decree only to save. When we elect a president, we do not need to hold a second election to determine that the remaining millions shall be non-presidents. It is needless to apply contrivance or force. As water naturally runs down hill, so sinners if let alone, will go down to ruin. The decree of reprobation is simply a decree to do nothing—a decree to leave the sinner to himself. The natural result of this judicial forsaking, on the part of God, is the hardening and destruction of the sinner. But it must not be forgotten that this hardening and destruction are not due to any positive efficiency of God,—they are a self-hardening and a self-destruction,—and God's judicial forsaking is only the just penalty of the sinner's guilty rejection of offered mercy: Hosea 11:8; 4:17; I Pet. 2:8; Jude 4; Matt. 25:34, 41. There is an election to life, but no reprobation to death; a "book of life" but not a book of death.

II Calling.

Calling is that act of God by which men are invited to accept, by faith, the Salvation provided by Christ.—The Scriptures distinguish between:

1. The general, or external, call to all men through God's providence, Word, and Spirit: Isa. 45:22; 55:6; Ezek. 33:11; Matt. 11:28; John 12:32; Rev. 3:20.
2. The special, efficacious call of the Holy Spirit to the elect; Luke 14:23; Rom. 1:7; 8:30; I Cor. 1:23, 24; I Thess. 2:12; II Tim. 1:9; II Pet. 1:10.

Two questions only need special consideration:

A. Is God's general call sincere?

This is denied, upon the ground that such sincerity is incompatible, first with the inability of the sinner to obey; and secondly, with the design of God to bestow only upon the elect the special grace without which they will not obey.

- (a) To the first objection we reply that, since this inability is not a physical but a moral inability, consisting simply in the settled perversity of an evil will, there can be no insincerity in offering salvation to all, especially when the offer is in itself a proper motive to obedience.
- (b) To the second, we reply that the objection, if true, would equally hold against God's foreknowledge. The sincerity of God's general call is no more inconsistent with His determination that some shall be permitted to reject it, than it is with foreknowledge that some will reject it.

B. Is God's special call irresistible?

We prefer to say that this special call is efficacious,—that is, that it infallibly accomplishes its purpose of leading the sinner to the acceptance of salvation. This implies two things:

- (a) That the operation of God is not an outward constraint upon the human will, but that it accords with the laws of our mental constitution. We reject the term "irresistible," as implying a coercion and compulsion which is foreign to the nature of God's working in the soul: Psa. 110:3; Phil. 2:12, 13.

- (b) That the operation of God is the originating cause of that new disposition of the affections and that new activity of the will by which the sinner accepts Christ. The cause is not in the response of the will to the presentation of motives by God, nor in any mere co-operation of the will of man with the will of God, but is an almighty act of God in the will of man, by which its freedom to choose God as its end is restored and rightly exercised: John 1:12, 13.

B. Union with Christ.

The Scriptures declare that, through the operation of God, there is constituted a union of the soul with Christ,—a union of life in which the human spirit, while still most truly possessing its own individuality and distinctness is inter-penetrated and energized by the Spirit of Christ, and made inscrutably but indissolubly one with Him, thus becoming a member and partaker of that regenerated, believing and justified humanity of which He is the Head.

NOTE 1: A. The symbolism of this union.

1. From the union of a building and its foundation: Eph. 2:20-22; Col. 2:7; I Pet. 2:4-5; Psa. 118:22; Isa. 28:16. Each living stone in the Christian temple is kept in proper relation to every other, and is made to do its part in furnishing a habitation for God, only by being built upon and permanently connected with Christ, the chief Corner-stone.
2. From the union between husband and wife: Rom. 7:4; II Cor. 11:2; Eph. 5:31, 32; Rev. 19:7. Union with Christ is illustrated by the indissoluble bond that connects husband and wife, and makes them legally and organically one.
3. From the union between the vine and its branches; John 15:1-10. See also Rom. 6:5; 11:24; Col. 2:6, 7. The roots of this new Vine, Christ, are planted in heaven, not on earth; and into it, the half-withered branches of the old humanity are to be grafted, that they may have life divine.
4. From the union between the members and the head of the body: I Cor. 6:15, 19; 12:12; Eph. 1:22, 23; Eph. 4:15, 16; 5:29, 30. As the members of the human body are united to the head, the source of their activity and the power that controls their movements, so all believers are members of an invisible Body, whose head is Christ.
5. From the union of the race with the source of its life in Adam: Rom. 5:12, 21; I Cor. 15:22, 45, 49. As the whole race is one with the first Adam, in whom it fell and from whom it has derived a corrupted and guilty nature, so the whole race of believers constitutes a new and restored humanity whose justified and purified nature is derived from Christ, the last Adam.

B. Scriptural statements concerning this union.

1. The believer is said to be in Christ: John 14:20; Rom. 6:11; 8:1; II Cor. 5:17; Eph. 1:4; 2:13.
2. Christ is said to be in the believer; John 14:20; Rom. 8:9, 10; Gal. 2:20.
3. The Father and the Son are said to dwell in the believer: John 14:23; Eph. 3:17; I John 4:16.
4. The believer is said to have life by partaking of Christ, as Christ has life by partaking of the Father: John 6:53, 56, 57; I Cor. 10:16, 17.
5. All believers are said to be one in Christ: John 17: 21-23.
6. The believer is declared to be a partaker of the Divine nature: II Pet. 1:4.
7. The believer is said to be made one spirit with the Lord: I Cor. 6:17.

NOTE 2: The nature of this union.
We have here to do not only with the fact of life, but with a unique relation between the finite and the Infinite. Our description, therefore, must be inadequate. Yet in many respects we know what this union is not; in certain respects, we can positively characterize it.

A. Negatively.—It is not:

1. A merely natural union, like that of God with all human spirits,—as held by rationalists.
2. A merely moral union, or union of love and sympathy, like that between teacher and scholar, friend and friend,—as held by Socinians and others. See I Sam. 18:1.
3. A union of essence, which destroys the distinct personality and subsistence of either Christ or the human spirit,—as held by many of the mystics.
4. A union mediated and conditioned by participation of the sacraments of the Church,—as held by some Ecclesiastical bodies.

B. Positively.—It is:

1. An organic union,—in which we become members of Christ and partakers of His humanity: Eph. 5:29, 30.
2. A vital union,—in which Christ's life becomes the dominating principle within us: Gal. 2:20; Col. 3:3, 4.
3. A spiritual union,—that is, a union whose Source and Author is the Holy Spirit: Rom. 8:9, 10; Eph. 3:16, 17.
4. An indissoluble union,—that is, a union which, consistently with Christ's promise and grace, can never be dissolved: Matt. 28:20; John 10:28; Rom. 8:35, 39; I Thess. 4:14, 17.
5. An inscrutable union,—mystical, however, only in the sense of surpassing in its intimacy and value any other union of souls which we know: Col. 1:27; Eph. 5:32.

The results of this union with Christ may be summarily stated as follows:

I Regeneration.

Union with Christ involves a change in the dominant affection of the soul. This change we call Regeneration.

1. The Nature of Regeneration.

(1) Theological definitions of Regeneration.

- A. Regeneration is a spiritual work wrought by the Spirit of God in the spirit of man.

NOTE—This definition does not define Regeneration. It could be applied to any work of the Spirit in the Christian life.

- B. Regeneration is the giving of a bent or direction to the affections and will.

NOTE—This is an inadequate description of Regeneration; it covers a part, but not the whole.

- C. Regeneration is that act of God by which the governing disposition of the soul is made holy, and by which, through the truth as a means, the first holy exercise of this disposition is secured.

NOTE—This is Dr. Strong's definition and is good, although it fails to make plain what that regenerating act of God is.

- D. Regeneration is the communication of the divine nature to man by the operation of the Holy Spirit through the Word.

NOTE—This is Dr. A. J. Gordon's definition and seems to be more in harmony with the teaching of Scripture than any of the preceding.

(2) Biblical descriptions of Regeneration.

- A. It is described as a new birth: John 3:3-7; James 1:18; I Pet. 1:23.
- B. It is described as a spiritual quickening or resurrection: John 5:21, 25; Eph. 2:1, 10.
- C. It is described as the impartation of a new nature: II Pet. 1:4.
- D. It is described as a spiritual translation: Col. 1:13.

NOTE—Regeneration is an instantaneous change and can, from the nature of the case, occur but once.

2. Necessity of Regeneration.

That all men without exception need to be changed in moral character, is manifest, not only in Scripture, but from the following rational considerations:

- (1) Holiness, or conformity to the fundamental moral attribute of God, is the indispensable condition of securing the divine favor, of attaining peace of conscience, and of preparing the soul for the associations and employments of the blest.
- (2) The condition of universal humanity as by nature depraved, and, when arrived at moral consciousness, as guilty of actual transgression, is precisely the opposite of that holiness without which the soul cannot exist in normal relation to God, to self, or to holy beings.
- (3) A radical internal change is, therefore, requisite in every human soul—a change in that which constitutes its character. Holiness cannot be attained, as the pantheist claims, by a merely natural growth or development, since man's natural tendencies are wholly in the direction of selfishness. There must be a reversal of his inmost dispositions and principles of action, if he is to see the kingdom of God.

3. The Efficient Cause of Regeneration.

Three views only need be considered,—all others are modifications of these. The first view puts the efficient cause of regeneration in the human will; the second, in the truth considered as a system of motives; the third, in the immediate agency of the Holy Spirit.

- (1) The human will, as the efficient cause of regeneration.
This view takes two forms, according as the will is regarded as acting apart from, or in conjunction with, special influences of the truth applied by God.

- A. To the view, that regeneration is solely the act of man, and is identical with self-reformation, we object that the sinner's depravity, since it consists in a fixed state of the affections which determines the settled character of the volitions, amounts to a moral inability. Without a renewal of the affections from which all moral actions spring, man will not choose holiness nor accept salvation.
 - B. To the view, that regeneration is the act of man, co-operating with divine influences applied through the truth (synergistic theory,) we object that no beginning of holiness is in this way conceivable. For, so long as man's selfish and perverse affections are unchanged, no choosing God is possible but such as proceeds from supreme desire for one's own interest and happiness. But the man thus supremely bent on self-gratification cannot see in God, or His service, anything productive of happiness; or, if he could see in them anything of advantage, his choice of God and His service from such a motive would not be a holy choice, and, therefore, could not be a beginning of holiness.
- (2) The truth, as the efficient cause of regeneration.
- According to this view, the truth as a system of motives is the direct and immediate cause of the change from unholiness to holiness. This view is objectionable for two reasons:
- A. It erroneously regards motives as wholly external to the mind that is influenced by them. This is to conceive of them as mechanically constraining the will, and is indistinguishable from necessitarianism. On the contrary, motives are compounded of external presentations and internal dispositions. It is the soul's affections which render certain suggestions attractive and others repugnant to us. In brief, the heart makes the motive.
 - B. Only as truth is loved, therefore, can it be a motive to holiness. But we have seen that the aversion of the sinner to God is such that the truth is hated instead of loved, and a thing that is hated, is hated more intensely, the more distinctly it is seen. Hence no mere power of the truth can be regarded as the efficient cause of regeneration. The contrary view implies that it is not the truth which the sinner hates, but rather some element of error which is mingled with it.
- (3) The immediate agency of the Holy Spirit, as the efficient cause of regeneration.

In ascribing to the Holy Spirit the authorship of regeneration, we do not affirm that the divine Spirit accomplishes His work without any accompanying instrumentality. We simply assert that the power which regenerates is the power of God, and that, although conjoined with the use of means, there is a direct operation of this power upon the sinner's heart which changes its moral character. We add two remarks by way of further explanation:

- A. The scriptural assertions of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit and of His mighty power in the soul forbid us to regard the divine Spirit in regeneration as coming in contact, not with the soul, but only with the truth. The phrases, "to energize the truth," "to intensify the truth," "to illuminate the truth," have no proper meaning; since even God cannot make the truth more true. If any change is wrought, it must be wrought, not in the truth, but in the soul.
- B. Even if truth could be energized, intensified, illuminated, there would still be needed a change in the moral disposition, before the soul could recognize its beauty or be affected by it. No mere increase of light can enable a blind man to see; the disease of the eye must first be cured before external objects are visible. So God's work in regeneration must be performed within the soul itself. Over and above all influence of the truth, there must be a direct influence of the Holy Spirit upon the heart. Although wrought in conjunction with the presentation of truth to the intellect, regeneration differs from moral suasion in being an immediate act of God.

4. The Instrumentality used in Regeneration.

- (1) The Roman, English and Lutheran churches hold that regeneration is accomplished through the instrumentality of baptism. The Disciples, or followers of Alexander Campbell, make regeneration include baptism, as well as repentance and faith. To the view that baptism is a means of regeneration we urge the following objections:

- A. The Scriptures represent baptism to be not the means but only the sign of regeneration, and, therefore, to presuppose and follow regeneration. For this reason only believers—that is, persons giving credible evidence of being regenerated—were baptized (Acts 8:12). Not external baptism, but the conscientious turning of the soul to God which baptism symbolizes, saves us (1 Pet. 3:21). Texts like Acts 2:38; Col. 2:12; are to be explained upon the principle that regeneration, the inward change, and baptism, the outward sign of that change, were regarded as only different sides or aspects of the same fact, and either side or aspect might, therefore, be described in terms derived from the other.

B. Upon this view, there is a striking incongruity between the nature of the change to be wrought and the means employed to produce it. It is far more rational to suppose that, in changing the character of intelligent beings, God uses means which have relation to their intelligence. The view we are considering is part and parcel of a general scheme of mechanical rather than moral salvation, and is more consistent with a materialistic than with a spiritual philosophy.

(2) The Scriptural view is that regeneration, so far as it secures an activity of man, is accomplished through the instrumentality of the truth. Although the Holy Spirit does not in any way illuminate the truth, He does illuminate the mind, so that it can perceive the truth. In conjunction with the change of man's inner disposition, there is an appeal to man's rational nature through the truth. Two inferences may be drawn:

A. Man is not wholly passive at the time of his regeneration. He is passive only with respect to the change of his ruling disposition. With respect to the exercise of this disposition, he is active. Although the efficient power which secures this exercise of the new disposition is the power of God, yet man is not, therefore, unconscious, nor is he a mere machine worked by God's fingers. On the other hand, his whole moral nature under God's working is alive and active. We reject the "exercise-system," which regards God as the direct Author of all man's thoughts, feelings, and volitions, not only in its general tenor, but in its special application to regeneration.

B. The activity of man's mind in regeneration is activity in view of the truth. God secures the initial exercise of the new disposition which He has wrought in man's heart in connection with the use of truth as a means. Here we perceive the link between the efficiency of God and the activity of man. Only as the sinner's mind is brought into contact with the truth, does God complete his regenerating work. And as the change of inward disposition and the initial exercises of it are never, so far as we know, separated by any interval of time, we can say, in general, that Christian work is successful only as it commends the truth to every man's conscience in the sight of God: II Cor. 4:2.

5. Sonship the Resultant Relationship Secured through Regeneration.

There are accompaniments and consequences of this relationship both on the human and divine sides, which we do well thoroughly to consider, though here they can be only briefly indicated.

(1) On the human side:

- A. As sons, we have the family name: Eph. 3:14, 15; I John 3:1; Rev. 2:17; 3:12.
- B. As sons, we have the family likeness: Col. 3:10; Rom. 8:29; II Cor. 3:18.
- C. As sons, we have the parents' nature: II Pet. 1:4; John 1:12, 13; 3:6.
- D. As sons, we have a family affection: I John 2:9-11; 3:14-18; 4:7-8; 5:1.

(2) On the divine side:

- A. As His children, we are the objects of His peculiar love: John 17:2, 3; John 16:27; Isa. 43:1-3.
- B. As His children, we are the subjects of His fatherly care: Matt. 6:32; Psa. 37:3; 75:2.
- C. As His children, we are the subjects of His paternal discipline: Heb. 12:6-11.
- D. As His children, we are the subjects of His paternal comfort: II Cor. 1:4; Isa. 66:13.
- E. As His children, we are made heirs to an inheritance: I Pet. 1:3-5; Rom. 8:17.

NOTE—The believer's sonship is the truth which is only partially taught under the term adoption. The Greek word "huiothesia" occurs in Rom. 8:15, 23 and 9:4 where it is translated "adoption;" in Gal. 4:5, where it is translated "adoption of sons;" and in Eph. 1:5, where it is translated "adoption of children." There is no more reason why, in Galatians and Ephesians, it should be translated by three words, than in the three occurrences in Romans, where it is translated by one word. But the question is, What does the word mean? It was invented by Paul, or by the Holy Spirit through Paul, to express a new idea in grace; and since there was no use of it before that time to help us to understand it, we must arrive at its meaning by the study of the word itself. Its derivation gives us the clue. It is a compound, and made out of the noun "huios," son, and the verb "titheimi," to put, to constitute, to make. It means, then, simply to make a son. Unfortunately, we have no single English equivalent to express it; but that is its signification. Now, how is a person made a son? By adoption, after the manner of the civil law? Legal adoption may put him in a son's place, but not in all respects in a son's condition; it may give him all the rights and privileges of a son, but he is not, therefore, a son. Whatever may be his position in the family, he is alien blood, and nothing can ever make him otherwise. When Moses was adopted by Pharaoh's daughter, that did not make him an Egyptian,—he was a Jew still.

There are not two ways of entrance into God's family as there are into the families of men: i.e., one by birth, and one by adoption; but only one way, and that is by birth: John 1:12, 13; 3:3. We are born into it.

Hence, we see that to make the English word "adoption," with the idea that commonly attaches to it, the equivalent of the Greek word "huiothesia," is to give but a poor and misleading rendering of a peculiar term which signifies something more and better. Believers are not brought from the world outside by a cold, legal, adoptive act, and given a son's right, while still of alien blood; but they are, in parental love, begotten, born, into that place, and have the same condition both with respect to inward nature and outward right that Jesus Christ Himself has; for we read in I John 4:17, "As He is, so are we in this world," and in Rom. 8:16, 17, "The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God; and if children then heirs: heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ."

II Conversion.

1. Definition.

By Conversion is meant that voluntary change in the mind of the sinner, in which he turns, on the one hand, from sin, and on the other hand, to Christ. The former or negative element in conversion, namely, the turning from sin, we call repentance. The latter or positive element in conversion, namely, the turning to Christ, we call faith.

NOTE—Conversion is the human side or aspect of the fundamental spiritual change, which, as viewed from the divine side, we call regeneration. It is simply man's turning. The Scriptures recognize the voluntary activity of the human soul in this change as distinctly as they recognize the causative agency of God. While God turns men to Himself (Psa. 85:4; Cant. 1:4; Jer. 31:18; Lam. 5:21), men are exhorted to turn themselves to God (Prov. 1:23; Isa. 31:6; 59:20; Ezek. 14:6; 18:32; 33:9, 11; Joel 2:12-14).

This two-fold method of representation can be explained only when we remember that man's powers may be inter-penetrated and quickened by the divine, not only without destroying man's freedom, but with the result of making man for the first time truly free. Since the relation between the divine and the human activity is not one of Chronological succession, man is never to wait for God's working. If he is ever regenerated, it must be in and through a movement of his own will, in which he turns to God as unconstrainedly and with as little consciousness of God's operation upon him, as if no such operation of God were involved in the change. And in preaching, we are to impress upon men the claims of God and their duty of immediate submission to Christ, with the certainty that they who do so submit will subsequently recognize this new and holy activity of their own will as due to a working within them of divine power.

From the fact that the word "conversion" means simply a turning, every turning of the Christian from sin, subsequent to the first, may, in a subordinate sense, be denominated a conversion (Luke 22:32). Since regeneration is not complete sanctification, and the change of the governing disposition is not identical with complete purification of the nature, such subsequent turnings from sin are necessary consequences and evidences of the first (cf John 13:10), but they do not, like the first, imply a change in the governing disposition,—they are rather new manifestations of a disposition already changed. For this reason, conversion proper, like the regeneration of which it is the obverse side, can occur but once. The phrase "second conversion," even if it does not imply radical misconception of the nature of conversion, is misleading. We prefer, therefore, to describe these subsequent experiences, not by the term "conversion" but by such phrases as "being restored to fellowship," "coming back to Christ," "forsaking sin," "returning from the world," or some such kindred expression.

(1) Repentance.

Repentance is that voluntary change in the mind of the sinner in which he turns from sin. Being essentially a change of mind, it involves a change of view, a change of feeling, and a change of purpose. We may, therefore, analyze repentance into three constituents, each succeeding term of which includes and implies the one preceding.

A. Essential elements involved in Repentance.

- a. An intellectual element,—change of view— recognition of sin as involving personal guilt, defilement, and helplessness: Psa. 51:3, 7, 11. If unaccompanied by other elements, this recognition may manifest itself in fear of punishment, although as yet there is no hatred of sin. This element is indicated in such passages as Rom. 3:20; 1:32.

NOTE—The confession, "I have sinned," is made by hardened Pharaoh (Ex. 9:27), double minded Balaam (Num. 22:34), remorseful Achan (Josh. 7:20), insincere king Saul (I Sam. 15:24), despairing Judas (Matt. 27:4); but in no one of these cases was there true repentance.

- b. An emotional element,—change of feeling—sorrow for sin as committed against goodness and justice, and, therefore, hateful to God, and hateful in itself (Psa. 51: 1, 2, 10, 14).

NOTE—True repentance takes God's part against ourselves, has sympathy with God, feels how unworthy the Ruler, Father, Friend of men has been treated. It does not ask, "What will my sin bring me?" but, "What does my sin mean to God?"

- c. A voluntary element,—change of purpose—inward turning from sin and disposition to seek pardon and cleansing (Psa. 51:5, 7, 10; Jer. 25:5; Prov. 28:13). This includes and implies the two preceding elements and is, therefore, the most important aspect of repentance.

NOTE—A broad distinction from the Scriptural doctrine, we find the Romanist view, which regards the three elements of repentance as the following: (1) contrition; (2) confession; (3) satisfaction. Of these, contrition is the only element properly belonging to repentance; yet from this contrition the Romanist excludes all sorrow for sin of nature. Confession is confession to the priest; and the satisfaction is the sinner's own doing of outward penance, as a temporal and symbolic submission and reparation to violated law. This view is false and pernicious in that it confounds repentance with its outward fruits, conceives of it as exercised rather toward the church than toward God, and regards it as a meritorious ground, instead of a mere condition, of pardon.

B. Further considerations and qualifications of repentance.

- a. Repentance, in each and all of its aspects, is wholly an inward act, not to be confounded with the change of life which proceeds from it.

NOTE—True repentance is, indeed, manifested and evidenced by confession of sin before God (Luke 18:13), and by reparation for wrongs done to men (Luke 19:8). But these do not constitute repentance; they are rather fruits of repentance. Between "repentance" and "fruit worthy of repentance," Scripture plainly distinguishes (Matt. 3:8).

- b. Repentance is only a negative condition, and not a positive means of salvation.

NOTE—This is evident from the fact that repentance is no more than a sinner's present duty, and can furnish no offset to the claims of the law on account of past transgressions. A truly penitent man feels that his repentance has no merit. Apart from the positive element of conversion, namely, faith in Christ, it would be only sorrow for guilt unremoved. This very sorrow, moreover, is not the product of human will, but is the gift of God (Acts 5:31; 11:18; II Tim. 2:25).

- c. True repentance never exists except in conjunction with faith.

NOTE—Sorrow for sin, not simply on account of its evil consequences to the transgressor, but on account of its intrinsic hatefulness as opposed to divine holiness and love, is practically impossible without some confidence in God's mercy. It is the cross which first makes us truly penitent (cf John 12:32, 33). Hence all true preaching of repentance is implicitly a preaching of faith (Matt. 3:1-12; cf Acts 19:4), and repentance toward God involves faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 20:21; Luke 15:10, 24; 19:8, 9; cf Gal. 3:7).

- d. Wherever there is true faith, there is true repentance.

NOTE—Since repentance and faith are but different sides or aspects of the same act of turning, faith is as inseparable from repentance as repentance is from faith. That must be an unreal faith where there is no repentance, just as that must be an unreal repentance where there is no faith. Yet because the one aspect of his change is more prominent in the mind of the convert than the other, we are not hastily to conclude that the other is absent. Only that degree of conviction of sin is essential to salvation, which carries with it a forsaking of sin and a trustful surrender to Christ.

(2) Faith.

Faith is that voluntary change in the mind of the sinner in which he turns to Christ. Being essentially a change of mind, it involves a change of view, a change of feeling, and a change of purpose. We may, therefore, analyze faith also into three constituents, each succeeding term of which includes and implies the preceding.

A. Essential elements involved in Faith.

- a. An intellectual element,—recognition of the truth of God's revelation or of the objective reality of the salvation provided by Christ. This includes not only an historical belief in the facts of the Scriptures, but an intellectual belief in the doctrine taught therein as to man's sinfulness and dependence upon Christ: John 2:23, 24; cf. 3:2; James 2:19; Acts 8:13.
- b. An emotional element,—assent to the revelation of God's power and grace in Jesus Christ, as applicable to the present needs of the soul. Those in whom this awakening of the sensibilities is unaccompanied by the fundamental decision of the will, which constitutes the next element of faith, may seem to themselves, and for a time they appear to others, to have accepted Christ: Matt. 13:20, 21; Psalms 106:12, 13; Exodus 33:31, 32; John 5:35; 8:30, 31.
- c. A voluntary element,—trust in Christ as Lord and Saviour; or, in other words,—to distinguish its two aspects:
 - (a) Surrender of the soul, as guilty and defiled, to Christ's control: Matt. 11:28, 29; John 8:12; 14:1; Acts 16:31.

NOTE—The sick man's faith in his physician is shown not simply by trusting him, but by obeying him. Doing what the doctor says is the very proof of trust. No physician will long care for a patient who refuses to obey his orders. Faith is self-surrender to the great Physician and the leaving of our case in His hands. But it is also the taking of His prescriptions, and the active following of His directions.

- (b) Reception and appropriation of Christ as the source of pardon and spiritual life: John 1:12; 4:14; 6:53; 20:31; Eph. 3:17.

NOTE—The three constituents of faith may be illustrated from the thought, feeling, and action of a person who stands by a boat, upon a little island which the rising stream threatens to submerge. He first regards the boat from a purely intellectual point of view,—it is merely an actually existing boat. As the stream rises, he looks at it, secondly, with some accession of emotion,—his prospective danger awakens in him the conviction that it is a good boat for a time of need, though he is not yet ready to make use of it. But thirdly, when he feels that the rushing tide must otherwise sweep him away, a volitional element is added,—he gets into the boat, trusts himself to it, accepts it as his present, and only, means of safety. Only this last faith in the boat is faith that saves, although this last includes both the preceding. It is equally clear that the getting into the boat may actually save a man, while at the same time he may be full of fears that the boat will never bring him to shore. These fears may be removed by the boatman's word. So saving faith is not necessarily assurance of faith; but it becomes assurance of faith when the Holy Spirit "beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God" (Rom. 8:16).

B. Further considerations and qualifications of Faith.

- a. Faith is an act of the affections and will, as truly as it is an act of the intellect.

NOTE—It has been claimed that faith and unbelief are purely intellectual states, which are necessarily determined by the facts at any given time presented to the mind; and that they are, for this reason, as destitute of moral quality and as far from being matters of obligation, as are our instinctive feelings of pleasure and pain. But this view unwarrantably isolates the intellect, and ignores the fact that, in all moral subjects, the state of the affections and will affects the judgment of the mind with regard to truth. In the intellectual act the whole moral nature expresses itself. Since the tastes determine the opinions, faith is a moral act, and men are responsible for not believing: John 3:18-20; 5:40; 16:8, 9.

- b. The object of saving faith is, in general, the whole truth of God, so far as it is objectively revealed or made known to the soul; but, in particular, the person and work of Jesus Christ, which constitutes the center and substance of God's revelation: Acts 17:18; I Cor. 1:23; Col. 1:27; Acts 4:12; 10:43; Rev. 19:10.
- c. The ground of faith is the external word of promise. The ground of assurance, on the other hand, is the inward witness of the Spirit that we fulfil the conditions of the promise (Rom. 4:20, 21; 8:16; Eph. 1:13; I John 4:13; 5:10). This new witness of the Spirit is not a new revelation from God, but a strengthening of faith so that it becomes conscious and unquestionable.
- d. Faith necessarily leads to good works, since it embraces the whole truth of God so far as made known, and appropriates Christ, not only as an external Saviour, but as an internal sanctifying power: Heb. 7:15, 16; Gal. 5:6.

NOTE—Good works are the proper evidence of faith. The faith which does not lead men to act upon the commands and promises of Christ, or, in other words, does not lead to obedience, is called in Scripture a "dead," that is, an unreal, faith. Such faith is not saving, since it lacks the voluntary element—actual appropriation of Christ: James 2:14-26.

- e. Faith, as characteristically the inward act of reception, is not to be confounded with love or obedience, its fruit: Gal. 5:6.

- f. Faith is susceptible of increase: Luke 17:5; Mark 9:24; Rom. 10:17.

NOTE—This is evident, whether we consider it from the human or from the divine side. As an act of man, it has an intellectual, an emotional, and a voluntary element, each of which is capable of growth. As a work of God in the soul of man, it can receive, through the presentation of the truth and the quickening agency of the Holy Spirit, continually, new accessions of knowledge, sensibility, and active energy. Such increase of faith, therefore, we are to seek, both by resolute exercise of our own powers, and above all, by direct application to the source of faith in God.

III Justification.

There is no doctrine of the gospel more important than Justification. It must ever be a question of intense interest, "How shall man be just with God?" Various answers have been given to this question. Some have insisted that justification is of grace; others have supposed it to be of works; while a third party have virtually attempted to commingle grace and works in a sinner's restoration to the favor of God. The adoption of correct views on this subject is highly necessary, not only on account of the importance of justification itself, but on account of the relation it bears to the other doctrines of Christianity. For it is obvious that our views of other doctrines will be influenced by the conclusions to which we come in regard to the way of acceptance with God.

1. The Meaning of Justification.

- (1) As theoretically and relatively defined.

By Justification we mean that judicial act of God by which, on account of Christ, to whom the sinner is united by faith, He declares that sinner to be no longer exposed to the penalty of the law, but to be restored to His favor. Or, to give an alternative definition from which all metaphor is excluded: Justification is the reversal of God's attitude toward the sinner, because of the sinner's new relation to Christ. God did condemn; He now acquits. He did repel; He now admits to favor. It is a change in a man's legal relation or status before God. It has to do with relations that have been disturbed by sin and these relations are personal. It is a change from guilt and condemnation to acquittal and acceptance. Regeneration has to do with the change of the believer's nature; Justification, with the change of his standing before God. The one is subjective, the other is objective.

NOTE—Justification, as thus defined, is, therefore, a declarative act, as distinguished from an efficient act; an act of God external to the sinner, as distinguished from an act within the sinner's nature and changing that nature; a judicial act, as distinguished from a sovereign act; an act based upon and logically pre-supposing the sinner's union with Christ, as distinguished from an act which causes and is followed by that union with Christ.

(2) According to the language and usage of the Scriptures.

The Greek word "dikaiosis" translated "justification," uniformly, or with only a single exception, signifies, not to make righteous, but to declare just, righteous, or free from guilt and exposure to punishment. (Ex. 23:7; Deut. 25:1; Job 27:5; Ps. 143:2; Prov. 17:15; Isa. 5:23; 50:8; 53:11.) The only Old Testament passage where this meaning is questionable is Dan. 12:3. But even here the proper translation is, in all probability, not "they that turn many to righteousness," but "they that justify many," i. e., caused many to be justified.

NOTE—In Rom. 6:7 we have a statement which might be translated "he that once died with Christ was acquitted from the service of sin considered as a penalty." In 1 Cor. 4:4 we have a similar statement, "I am conscious of no fault, but that does not in itself make certain God's acquittal as respects this particular charge." Acquittal is the equivalent translation of justification. The usage of the epistle of James does not contradict this; the doctrine of James is that we are justified only by such faith that makes us faithful and brings forth good works. He uses the word exclusively in a judicial sense; he combats a mistaken view of "pistis" the Greek word for faith, not a mistaken view of "dikaioo" the Greek word for justified: see James 2:21, 23, 24.

The Greek word "dikaiosis" translated justification in Rom. 4:25; 5:18, describes the act in process, of declaring a man just,—that is, acquitted from guilt and restored to the divine favor.

The Greek word translated justification in Rom. 5:16 describes the act, as already accomplished, of declaring a man just,—that is, no longer exposed to penalty, but restored to God's favor. Hence, in other connections, it has the meaning of statute, legal decision, act of justice: Luke 1:6; Rom. 2:26; Heb. 9:1.

It is worthy of special observation that, in the passages cited above, the terms "justify" and "justification" are contrasted, not with the process of depraving or corrupting, but with the outward act of condemning; and that the expressions used to explain and illustrate them are all derived, not from the inward operation of purifying the soul or infusing into it righteousness, but from the procedure of courts in their judgments, or of offended persons in their forgiveness of offenders. We conclude that these terms, wherever they have reference to the sinner's relation to God, signify a declarative and judicial act of God, external to the sinner, and not an efficient and sovereign act of God changing the sinner's nature and making him subjectively righteous. See also Deut. 25:1; Rom. 4:2-8; Ps. 32:2.

2. Elements Involved in Justification.

(1) The forgiveness of sin and the removal of its guilt and punishment.

God acquits the ungodly who believe in Christ, and declares them just. This is not to declare them innocent,—that would be a judgment contrary to truth. It declares that the demands of the law have been satisfied with regard to them, and that they are now free from its condemnation: Rom. 4:5; cf. John 3:16; Rom. 5:1.

NOTE—This acquittal, in so far as it is the act of God as Judge or Executive, administering law, may be termed "pardoned." In so far as it is the act of God as a Father personally injured and grieved by sin, yet showing grace to the sinner, it is termed "forgiveness." Forgiveness may be defined, in personal terms, as a cessation of the anger or moral resentment of God against sin; in ethical terms, as a release from the guilt of sin which oppresses the conscience; in legal terms, as a remission of the punishment of sin, which is eternal death. See Micah 7:18; Ps. 130:4.

In an earthly tribunal, there is no acquittal for those who are proved to be transgressors,—for such there is only conviction and punishment. But in God's government there is remission of punishment for believers, even though they are confessedly offenders; and, in justification, God declares this remission. See Psa. 34:22; Heb. 10:17.

The declaration that the sinner is no longer exposed to the penalty of law, has its ground, not in any satisfaction of the law's demand on the part of the sinner himself, but solely in the bearing of the penalty by Christ, to whom the sinner is united by faith. Justification, in its first element, is, therefore, that act by which God, for the sake of Christ, acquits the transgressor and suffers him to go free: Acts 13:38, 39; Rom. 3:24, 26; Eph. 1:7. This acquittal is not to be conceived of as the sovereign act of a governor, but rather as a judicial procedure. Christ secures a new trial for those already condemned—a trial in which He appears for the guilty, and sets over against their sin His own righteousness, or rather shows them to be righteous in Him.

(2) The imputation of Christ's righteousness and restoration to God's favor.

This restoration to favor, viewed in its aspect as the renewal of a broken friendship, is denominated reconciliation; viewed in its aspect as a renewal of the soul's true relation to God as a Father, it is termed sonship, sometimes called adoption: John 1:12; Rom. 5:11; Gal. 4:4, 5; Eph. 1:5; Rom. 8:23; 3:22; II Cor. 5:20, 21; I Cor. 1:30.

NOTE—In an earthly pardon there are no special helps bestowed upon the pardoned. There are no penalties, but there are also no rewards; law cannot claim anything of the discharged, but then they also can claim nothing of the law. But what, though greatly needed, is left unprovided by human government, God does provide. In justification, there is not only acquittal, but approval; not only pardon, but promotion. Remission is never separated from restoration.

The declaration that the sinner is restored to God's favor has its ground, not in the sinner's personal character or conduct, but solely in the obedience and righteousness of Christ, to whom the sinner is united by faith. Thus Christ's work is the procuring cause of our justification, in both its elements. As we are acquitted on account of Christ's suffering of the penalty of the law, so on account of Christ's obedience we receive the rewards of law.

John G. Whittier:

"The hour draws near, howe'er delayed and late,
When at the Eternal Gate,
We leave the words and works we call our own,
And lift void hands alone
For love to fill. Our nakedness of soul
Brings to that gate no toll;
Giftless we come to Him who all things gives,
And live because He lives."

James Russell Lowell:

"At the devil's booth all things are sold,
Each ounce of dross costs its ounce of gold;
For a cap and bells our lives we pay;
Bubbles we buy with a whole soul's tasking:
'Tis heaven alone that is given away,
'Tis only God may be had for the asking."

3. The Various Relationships of Justification.

(1) Its relation to the requirement of God's law and holiness.

- A. Justification has been shown to be a forensic term. A man may, indeed, be conceived of as just, in either of two senses: as just in moral character,—that is, absolutely holy in nature, disposition, and conduct; as just in relation to law,—or as free from all obligation to suffer penalty, and as entitled to the rewards of obedience. So, too, man may be conceived of as justified in either of two senses: made just in moral character; or, made just in his relation to law. But the Scriptures declare that there does not exist on earth a just man, in the first of these senses (Eccl. 7:20). Even in those who are renewed in moral character and united to Christ, there is a remnant of moral depravity.

NOTE—If, therefore, there be any such thing as a just man, he must be just, not in the sense of possessing an unspotted holiness, but in the sense of being delivered from the penalty of law, and made partaker of its rewards. If there be any such thing as justification, it must be, not an act of God which renders the sinner absolutely holy, but an act of God which declares the sinner to be free from legal penalties and entitled to legal rewards.

- B. The difficult feature of justification is the declaration, on the part of God, that a sinner whose remaining sinfulness seems to necessitate the vindictive reaction of God's holiness against him, is yet free from such reaction of holiness as is expressed in the penalties of the law.

The fact is to be accepted on the testimony of Scripture. If this testimony be not accepted, there is no deliverance from the condemnation of law. But the difficulty of conceiving of God's declaring the sinner no longer exposed to legal penalty is relieved, if not removed, by the three-fold consideration:

- (a) That Christ has endured the penalty of the law in the sinner's stead: Gal. 3:13; Rom. 8:3; cf. Rom. 3:26.
- (b) That the sinner is so united to Christ that Christ's life already constitutes the dominating principle within him: Gal. 2:20.
- (c) That this life of Christ's power in the soul and upon the soul, will gradually, but infallibly, extirpate all remaining depravity, until the whole physical and moral nature is perfectly conformed to the divine holiness: Phil. 3:21; Col. 3:1-4.

(2) Its relation to the believer's union with Christ and the work of the Spirit.

- A. Since the sinner, at the moment of justification, is not yet completely transformed in character, we have seen that God can declare him just, not on account of what he is in himself, but only on account of what Christ is. The ground of justification is, therefore, not, as the Romanists hold, a new righteousness and love infused into us, and now constituting our moral character; nor, as Osiander taught, the essential righteousness of Christ's divine nature, which has become ours by faith; but, the satisfaction and obedience of Christ, as the head of a new humanity, and as embracing in Himself all believers as His members.

NOTE—As Adam's sin is imputed to us, not because Adam is in us, but because we were in Adam; so Christ's righteousness is imputed to us, not because Christ is in us, but because we are in Christ,—that is, joined by faith to One whose righteousness and life are infinitely greater than our power to appropriate or contain. In this sense, we may say that we are justified through a Christ outside of us as we are sanctified through a Christ within us.

- B. The relation of justification to regeneration and sanctification, moreover, delivers it from the charges of externality and immorality. God does not justify ungodly men in their ungodliness. He pronounces them just only as they are united to Christ, who is absolutely just, and who, by His Spirit, can make them just, not only in the eye of the law, but in moral character. The very faith by which the sinner receives Christ is an act in which he ratifies all that Christ has done, and accepts God's judgment against sin as his own: John 16:11; Rom. 8:3, 4.

NOTE—Justification is possible, therefore, because it is always accompanied by regeneration and union with Christ, and is followed by sanctification. But this is a very different thing from the Romanist confounding of justification and sanctification as different stages of the same process of making the sinner actually holy. It holds fast to the Scripture distinction between justification as a declarative act of God, and regeneration and sanctification as those efficient acts of God by which justification is accompanied and followed. See Eph. 5:25, 26; I Pet. 1:1, 2.

(3) Its relation to faith.

We are justified by faith, rather than by love or by any other grace: not because faith is itself a work of obedience by which we merit justification,—for this would be a doctrine of justification by works; nor because faith is accepted as an equivalent of obedience,—for there is no equivalent except the perfect obedience of Christ; nor because faith is the germ from which obedience may spring hereafter,—for it is not the faith which accepts, but the Christ who is accepted, that renders such obedience possible; but because faith, and not repentance, or love, or hope, is the medium or instrument by which we receive Christ and are united to Him. Hence we are never said to be justified on account of faith, but only through faith, or by faith. Or, to express the same truth in other words, while the grace of God is the efficient cause of justification, and the obedience and sufferings of Christ are the meritorious or procuring cause, faith is the mediate or instrumental cause.

NOTE 1—Since the ground of justification is only Christ, to whom we are united by faith, the justified person has peace. If it were anything in ourselves, our peace must needs be proportioned to our holiness. The practical effect of the Romanist mingling of works with faith, as a joint ground of justification is to render all assurance of salvation impossible. (This quotation from Council of Trent, 9th chapter, gives Romanist view: "Every man, by reason of his own weakness and defects, must be in fear and anxiety about his state of grace. Nor can any one know, with infallible certainty of faith, that he has received forgiveness of God"). But since justification is an instantaneous act of God, complete at the moment of the sinner's first believing, it has no degrees. Weak faith justifies as perfectly as strong faith; although, since justification is a secret act of God, weak faith does not give so strong assurance of salvation.

NOTE 2—Justification is instantaneous, complete, and final: instantaneous, since, otherwise, there would be an interval during which the soul was neither approved nor condemned by God (Matt. 6:24); complete, since the soul, united to Christ by faith, becomes partaker of His complete satisfaction to the demands of law (Col. 2:9, 10); and final, since the union with Christ is indissoluble (John 10:28, 29). As there are many acts of sin in the life of the Christian, so there are many acts of forgiveness following them. But all these acts of forgiveness are virtually implied in that first act by which he was finally and forever justified; as also successive acts of repentance and faith, after such sins, are virtually implied in that first repentance and faith which logically preceded justification.

IV Sanctification.

1. The Meaning of Sanctification.

(1) Negatively.

- A. It is not the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The two are constantly confused, but they are not at all one and the same thing and only confusion and misconception can arise from confounding the two terms. The baptism of the Holy Spirit primarily refers to the event which took place on the day of Pentecost wherein the Holy Spirit made the individual disciples, or believers, to become members of the mystical and corporate body of Christ which is the Church. It also includes the successive acts of the Holy Spirit since the day of Pentecost by which He has made individual believers to become members of that same mystical body: I Cor. 12:12, 13. But, as we shall see later, Sanctification describes something entirely separate and distinct from this.
- B. It is not Perfectionism or the Eradication of the Adamic nature, which holds that the Christian may, in this life, become perfectly free from sin. In reply, it will be sufficient to say:
 - a. That the theory rests upon false conceptions; first, of law,—as a sliding-scale of requirement graduated to the moral condition of creatures, instead of being the unchangeable reflection of God's holiness; secondly, of sin,—as consisting only in voluntary acts instead of embracing also those dispositions and states of the soul which are not conformed to the divine holiness; thirdly, of the human will,—as able to choose God supremely and persistently at every moment of life, and to fulfill at every moment the obligations resting upon it, instead of being corrupted and enslaved by the Fall.

NOTE—This view reduces the debt to the debtor's ability to pay,—a short and easy method of discharging obligations. I can leap over a church steeple, if I am only permitted to make the church steeple low enough; and I can touch the stars, if the stars will only come down to my hand. The Philistines are quite equal to Samson, if they may only cut off Samson's locks. So I can obey God's law, if I may only make God's law what I want it to be. The fundamental error of perfectionism is its low view of God's law; the second is its narrow conception of sin. John Wesley said: "I believe a person filled with love of God is still liable to involuntary transgressions. Such transgressions you may call sins, if you please; I do not."

- b. The theory is not supported, but rather contradicted by the teaching of Scripture.
 - (a) The Scriptures never assert or imply that the Christian may in this life be perfectly sinless. Passages like I John 3:6, 9 may seem to, but when properly interpreted they only show the real and contrastive change between the life of the regenerate and the unregenerate.

NOTE—The Christian life in its essential nature is the opposite of all sin. If there be sin, it must be the after working of the old nature. Yet all Christians are required in Scripture to advance, to confess sin and receive forgiveness, to maintain warfare, to assume the attitude of ill desert in prayer, to receive chastisement for the removal of imperfections, to regard full salvation as matter of hope, not of present experience.

John paints only in black and white: there are no intermediate tints or colors. Take the words in I John 3:6 literally in the Authorized Version, and there never was and never can be a regenerate person. Neander said: "John recognizes no intermediate state, no gradations. He seizes upon the radical point of difference. He contrasts the two states in their essential nature and principle. It is either love or hate, light or darkness, truth or a lie. The Christian life in its essential nature is the opposite of all sin. If there be sin, it must be the after working of the old nature."

In order to understand John's terms and get his meaning, one must take his own definitions. He defines sin as lawlessness, and hence when he says "Whosoever abideth in Him sinneth not," he is simply declaring that the abiding one is not lawless and that he that is lawless has not seen Christ, neither known Him. When he says, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin," he simply declares that the begotten one does not practise lawlessness, for God's nature remains in Him and he cannot be lawless in character.

- (b) The apostolic admonitions to the early Christians show that no such state of complete sanctification had been attained by them. The party feeling, selfishness, and immorality found among the members of the Corinthian church are evidence that they were far from a state of entire sanctification: I Cor. 1:1, 2, 10, 11; 3:1-3; 6:4-8; 11:17-19, 29-31. See also I John 1:8-10.
- (c) We have the record in Scripture of sins committed by some of the most perfect characters of which it bears witness, such as Noah, Abraham, Job, Moses, David, Peter, and others.
- (d) The Greek word "teleios" translated perfect, as applied to spiritual conditions already attained, can fairly be held to signify only a relative perfection, equivalent to sincere piety or maturity of Christian judgment: I Cor. 2:6; Phil. 3:15. See also Gen. 6:9; Job 1:1.
- (e) The Scriptures distinctly deny that any man on earth lives without sin: I Kings 8:46; Eccl. 7:20; James 3:2; I John 1:8.

NOTE—Some mistake Regeneration for Sanctification. They have been unconverted church members. When led to faith in Christ, and finding peace and joy, they think they are sanctified, when they are simply converted or regenerated. Some mistake assurance of faith for Sanctification, but joy is not Sanctification.

- c. The theory is disapproved by the testimony of Christian experience.—In exact proportion to the soul's advance in holiness does it shrink from claiming that holiness has been already attained, and humbles itself before God in contrition and confession for its remaining apathy, ingratitude, and unbelief: Phil. 3:12-14.

NOTE—"The truest holiness is that of which the possessor is least conscious; yet it is his real diadem and beauty." A. J. Gordon. "The nearer men are to being sinless, the less they talk about it." "I have not sinned for some time," said a woman to Mr. Spurgeon. "Then you must be very proud of it," he replied. "Indeed I am!" said she. A pastor says, "No one can attain the 'higher life' and escape making mischief." John Wesley lamented that not one in thirty retain the blessing.

But while we show no favor to those who would make Sanctification a sudden and paroxysmal act of the human will, we should hold forth the holiness of God as the standard of attainment, and the faith in a Christ of infinite fullness as the medium through which that standard is to be gradually, but certainly realized in us: 2 Cor. 3:18.

It is possible that one may experience a great crisis in his spiritual life, in which there is such a total surrender of self to God and such an infilling of the Holy Spirit, that he is freed from the bondage of sinful appetites and habits, and enabled to have constant victory over self instead of suffering constant defeat....If the doctrine of sinless imperfection is a heresy, the doctrine of contentment with sinful perfection is a greater heresy....It is not an edifying spectacle to see a Christian worldling throwing stones at a Christian perfectionist."

(2) Positively.

The primary root meaning of the word is separation. This separation, or setting apart, includes also dedication. Thus Sanctification, in its general sense, is the separation and dedication of a person or object to and for God, to belong wholly to Him and to be used for His glory (Psa. 4:3). This is not only the root meaning, but it is also the meaning secured by the study, not only of the word itself, but kindred words and their usage in Scripture.

NOTE—Sanctification and holiness are largely the same. The Greek word "hagiasmos" occurs ten times in the New Testament; five times it is translated "holiness" (Rom. 6:19, 22; I Thess. 4:7; I Tim. 2:15; Heb. 12:14), and five times "sanctification" (I Cor. 1:30; I Thess. 4:3, 4; II Thess. 2:13; I Pet. 1:2). In the Revised Version the same word "sanctification" is used throughout. This is better and more correct. The same word with slight variations in form ("hagiotays" in Heb. 12:10 and "hagiosunay" in Rom. 1:4; II Cor. 7:1; I Thess. 3:13) is translated "holiness" four times in both versions; also in the R. V. of I Cor. 1:12 (for "simplicity"). The word for "holiness" (R. V. "godliness") in Acts 3:12 is different and means piety toward God, godliness, while the one translated "holiness" in Luke 1:75; Eph. 4:24 (both versions) is from a word ("hosios") which means undefiled by sin, free from wickedness, pure, holy. Thus the noun occurs seventeen (R. V. eighteen) times in the New Testament.

The verb (hagiazō) is translated "hallow" twice (Matt. 6:9; Luke 11:2) and "sanctify" twenty-seven times. The adjective (hagios), from the same root, is translated "holy" eight times and "saints" sixty-two times. The other word for "holy" (hosios), adjective and adverb, occurs nine times. There is still another word, meaning sacred, priestly, pertaining to God, which occurs twice (I Cor. 9:13; II Tim. 3:15). The word "holy" in connection with the Spirit occurs nearly 100 times.

In the Old Testament the word "sanctify" occurs 106 times; "sanctuary," a sanctified place, 135 times (sixty-eight times from the same root and sixty-seven times from a slightly different one); "consecrate" seven times (Ex. 28:3; 30:30; Josh. 6:19; II Chron. 26:18; 29:33; 31:6; Ezra 3:5); "holy" 410 times; "holiness" thirty times; "hallowed" thirty-five times; "saints" thirty-seven times (eighteen times from this same word and nineteen times from a different one, meaning good, pious). These are all from the same root. They are also from practically the same word except "sanctuary" sixty-seven times, "holy" eight times and "saints" nineteen times. Even these, with possibly twenty-four exceptions, have the same meaning as the others.

Thus the word in its various forms occurs 300 times in the New Testament and 760 times in the Old, or 1060 times in both. Of these, all but 108 are from the same Greek and Hebrew roots and mean the same thing. Of the 108, only thirty-eight have a different meaning from the others, and even their meanings are in harmony with the others.

The term as used in the Bible has a two-fold usage: the ceremonial or formal meaning and the practical or moral meaning.

A. Ceremonial or formal meaning.

That which belonged to Jehovah, set apart for His service, was considered holy. Nothing is necessarily implied as to moral character, for that which was set apart, might be days, seasons, places, objects used for worship, or persons. To sanctify anything in the formal sense, was to separate it from common and profane use and to declare that it belonged to God (Num. 3:13; 8:17). Everything thus sanctified was considered holy.

NOTE 1—A. Days and seasons were sanctified (Gen. 2:3; Deut. 5:12; Neh. 13:19-22; Joel 1:14; 2:15).

B. Places were sanctified, such as houses (Lev. 27:14), fields (Lev. 27:16-22), and the like. The mount upon which God was to meet Moses with the law was to be sanctified, or set off so that the people could not go up into it nor even touch it (Ex. 19:12, 23; Heb. 12:20).

C. The tabernacle and its furniture, and the offerings, were sanctified (Ex. 29:27, 33, 36, 37, 44; 30:25-29; 40:10, 11; Lev. 8:10, 11; Num. 7:1). The anointing sanctified. The altar was cleansed before it was sanctified.

D. The priests were first cleansed, ceremonially, by water, a type of regeneration. This must be done by Moses, not by themselves. After this they were anointed, which sanctified them (Ex. 29:4-9; 40:12, 13; Lev. 8:6, 12).

E. The first-born of man and of beast was sanctified to God (Ex. 13:2; Num. 8:17).

F. Israel, as a nation, was sanctified (Ex. 19:5, 6, 10).

G. In the New Testament the formal sense is used of things, but sparingly (Matt. 23:17, 19; Heb. 9:13; I Tim. 4:5).

H. Every child of God is a "saint," or sanctified person, in this formal sense. He is "sanctified in Christ Jesus"—the blood and the work of regeneration does this—and he belongs to God, although he may not be sanctified in the moral sense. This is sometimes called imputed sanctification.

NOTE 2—Here doubtless belong those passages which deal with the thought of the sanctification of God. He is absolutely holy, and never needed to be made so. But He is also radically different and separated from the heathen gods and the god of this world (Ex. 15:11-18; I Sam. 6:20; Psa. 89:7; 99:2, 3), and when His people or His professed people live like the people of the world they bring Him and His great name down to the level of the god of this world, at least as far as the world sees. They have profaned Him and His name among the nations. Hence, by cleansing and separating His people and making them different from the world, He separates Himself and His great name and puts them where they belong (Ezek. 36:20-27; also 20:41; 28:25; 38:16; 39:27; cf. Num. 20:12, 13; 27:14; Lev. 10:1-3; Isa. 5:16; 8:13; 29:23). This is also what "hallowed be thy name" means (Matt. 6:9). Therefore, to sanctify God (R. V., "Christ") as Lord in the heart is to separate Him from, and separate from Him, everything which opposes Him and which He opposes (I Pet. 3:15). He Himself does this by separating us to Himself.

B. The Practical or moral meaning.

This is the phase which is of special interest to the Christian. It is imputed sanctification imparted, or sanctification, in the formal sense, applied to Christians and made real by the indwelling Holy Spirit.

NOTE—Since no unclean person nor thing can be set apart to God for His use, sanctification includes and presupposes cleansing (John 15:3 with 17:17; Eph. 5:26, R. V., "sanctify, having cleansed," Lev. 8:6-12). There is but one place where sanctification seems to be synonymous with cleansing, and that is when Hezekiah cleansed the temple after the wicked reign of Ahab (II Chron. 29:5, 15-18). Even then it is probable that the cleansing preceded the sanctifying, or the setting apart again for the worship of Jehovah. In the New Testament, the work of cleansing is assigned to regeneration and is made a condition for admission into the family of God.

Regeneration sanctifies. It is a part of sanctification; the beginning of it, the entrance into it. But the one stops while the other goes on. Both separate—the one separates sin from the sinner and makes him a Christian; the other keeps the Christian separate from sin and makes him a vessel “meet for the Master’s use, prepared unto every good work” (II Tim 2:21). It is one thing to be cleansed, another thing to be kept clean; one thing to be healed of a disease, another thing to be kept from it so that one may not have it again.

2. The Time of Sanctification.

- (1) The Sanctification of the believer begins when he first becomes such, or at his conversion. This might be called initial Sanctification, and is instantaneous. Sanctification at this stage is both positional and experimental, or objective and subjective. In the former sense, it is closely associated with Justification; in the latter sense, it is closely associated with Regeneration: I Cor. 6:11; Heb. 10:10, 14; Titus 3:5; I Pet. 1:2.

NOTE—With reference to Sanctification, in this initial sense, Christians are called “saints” I Cor. 1:2; Rom. 1:7; II Cor. 1:1. If a man is not a saint he is not a Christian; if he is a Christian, he is a saint. In some quarters, people are canonized after they are dead; the New Testament canonizes believers while they are alive. Note how, in I Cor. 6:11, “sanctified” is put before “justified.” The believer grows in sanctification rather than into sanctification out of something else. By a simple act of faith in Christ, the believer is at once put into a state of sanctification. Every Christian is a sanctified man. The same act that ushers him into the state of justification admits him at once into the state of sanctification, in which he is to grow until he reaches the fulness of the measure of the stature of Christ.

- (2) The Sanctification of the believer continues throughout his life upon earth. This is sometimes called Progressive Sanctification, and is the process of that of which the former is the crisis: II Pet. 3:18; II Cor. 3:18; 7:1.

NOTE—It includes a subduing of the heart by Jesus, who is now or should be, in a very real sense, Lord; a yielding to Him of the results of the old nature as they come up, the sins, faults, and desires as they are shown in the Word, the mirror and the Spirit’s instrument (Jas. 1:22-25; Psa. 119:105; John 17:17; Eph. 5:25, 26); a pruning process (John 15:1-3); often a chastening process (I Pet. 1:7; 4:12, 13); a growing in (not into) grace and the knowledge of Him (II Pet. 3:18); an abounding more and more in love and in a godly walk (I Thess. 3:12; 4:1, 10); a bringing of every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ (II Cor. 10:5), etc. The separation from each sin (anger, pride, etc.) as it comes up and is definitely handed over to the Sanctifier for crucifixion may be instantaneous, but He does not do all His work in an instant, and it seems to be the experience of most people that the things which hinder are dealt with individually. As we look into the mirror and see the blemishes, we do not grieve the Spirit by trying to free ourselves from them, but we deal with Him and trust Him to put them away from us (Eph. 4:30, 31). While it is true that the Spirit does not reveal all defects and unclaimed territory at once, yet it is also true that, the moment anything like this is revealed, we can and should claim and secure complete and instantaneous and permanent victory.

- (3) The Sanctification of the believer will be complete at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Then, and then only, will he have entire sanctification, or be sanctified wholly—spirit, soul and body: I Thess. 3:12, 13; 5:23, R. V.; I John 3:2; Phil. 3:20, 21.

NOTE—The blessing of entire and complete sanctification is to take place when Christ comes. “Wholly” means complete in every part, perfect in every respect, whether it refers to the church as a whole, or to the individual believer. Some day, the believer is to be complete in all departments of Christian character—no Christian grace missing: complete in the “spirit” which links him with heaven; in the “body” which links him with earth; in the “soul” as being that on which heaven and earth play: mature in each separate element of Christian character: spirit, soul, and body.

3. The Method of Sanctification.

We come now to the question as to how men are sanctified. What means are used, and what agencies employed to make men holy and conform them into the likeness of Christ? The agencies and means are both divine and human: both God and man contributing and operating towards this desired end.

(1) From the divine side it is the work of the Triune God.

A. It is the work of God the Father: John 17:17; I Thess. 5:23, 24. It appears from this last verse that Sanctification is God's work. The God of peace has called us to it, and will accomplish it. He is both the Old and the New Testament Sanctifier: Lev. 20:8; 21:15, 23; Jude 1. The book of Leviticus deals almost entirely with this great subject.

B. It is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. He purchased it; His blood was the price paid. God appointed Him to be the sanctification of His people: I Cor. 1:30.

a. He has sanctified all believers by His blood and by His name: Heb. 10:10; 13:12; I Cor. 6:9-11.

b. He continues the believer's sanctification by His life and His union with the believer: Heb. 2:11; Eph. 5:25, 26. He, Himself, is the great wall of separation for the Christian.

C. It is the work of the Holy Spirit. He is the God-provided Workman to do the work: I Cor. 6:11; I Pet. 1:2; Rom. 15:16; II Thess. 2:13. Jesus purchased Sanctification and the gift of the Spirit by His blood, and is now at the right hand of God, but He indwells the Christian as subduer and sanctifier through the Holy Spirit.

NOTE—Here the question arises, In what sense does the Holy Spirit who sanctifies the believer accomplish His work? In this sense, just as in the Old Testament type the tabernacle, altar, and priest were set apart for God by the anointing oil (Lev. 8:10-12), so in the New Testament anti-type, the believer, who is both tabernacle and priest, is set apart for God by the anointing of the Holy Spirit. Further than that, it is the Holy Spirit's work in the heart that overcomes the flesh and its defilements, and thus separates the believer from sin and clothes him with divine graces of character, and makes him fit to be God's own. As Paul puts it in Gal. 5:22, 23, "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faith, meekness, self-control." In opposition to this work of the Holy Spirit we read in the immediately preceding verses what "the works of the flesh" are, an awful catalogue of vileness and sin, and we are told in the 16th verse, "Walk in the Spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh."

(2) From the human side certain instrumental agencies are used.

A. An appropriating faith: Acts 15:9; 26:18; I Cor. 1:30.

NOTE—Christ is, indeed, made all things needful to the believer, but in reality, He becomes such in actual experience only as we appropriate Him for ourselves. Only as the believer daily, yea, even momentarily, takes by faith the Holiness of Jesus Christ, His faith, His patience, His love, His grace, to be his own for the need of that very moment, can Christ, who by His death was made unto him Sanctification in the positional sense, become unto him Sanctification in the progressive and experimental sense—producing in the believer His own life moment by moment. Herein lies the secret of a holy life—the continuous appropriation of Jesus Christ and all the riches of His grace for every need as it arises. The degree of our sanctification is the proportion of our appropriation of Christ.

- B. The study of the Scriptures in subjection to the Will of God:
John 17:17; Eph. 5:26; John 15:3.

NOTE—The Word of God cleanses from the presence of sin, separates us from it and sets us apart for God. As we bring our lives into daily contact with God's Word, the sins and imperfections of our hearts and lives are disclosed, and as we put them away, we become increasingly separated from sin unto God. Our Sanctification is limited by our limitation in the knowledge of, and our lack of obedience to the Word of God. For by the Word sin is made known, conscience is awakened, the character and example of Christ are revealed, and the enabling power of the Holy Spirit is placed at the believer's disposal. There is no power like that of the Word of God for detaching a man from the world, the flesh, and the devil. The Book will separate you from sin, or sin will separate you from the Book.

- C. By judgment of the self-life, personal renunciation of sin and the pursuit of holiness: Rom. 6:19; II Cor. 7:1; I Cor. 11:18, 31; Heb. 12:14, R. V.

NOTE—One cannot become a saint in his sleep. The lazy man will not be the holy man. Holiness must be the object of one's pursuit. To "follow after" (Heb. 12:14, R. V.), means to pursue, to persecute, as Saul of Tarsus pursued and followed the early Christians.

Sanctification is brought about in the life of the believer by his separating himself deliberately from all that is unclean and unholy, and by presenting continually, and constantly the members of his body as holy instruments unto God for the accomplishment of His holy purposes. Thus by these single acts of surrender unto holiness, sanctification soon becomes the habit of the life.

- D. By subjection to the "Father of spirits" in the exercise of His parental discipline: Heb. 12:5-11.

V Prayer.

1. The Plausibility of Prayer.

The belief that specific ends are attained and the granting of special requests is obtained in answer to prayer, is considered by many to be inconsistent with the so-called fixity of law, and, therefore, irrational.

NOTE—Tyndall, while repelling the charge of denying that God can answer prayer at all, yet does deny that He can answer it without a miracle. He says expressly "that without a disturbance of natural law quite as serious as the stoppage of an eclipse, or the rolling of the St. Lawrence up the falls of Niagara, no act of humiliation, individual or national, could call one shower from heaven or deflect towards us a single beam of the sun." The reasonableness of prayer may be shown in a way that will be satisfactory to faith, but not to blind unbelief. The fact of prayer and its answer is not contrary to true reason, though it is above and beyond merely natural reason and human philosophy,—it is a fact that is understood only in the light of Divine revelation.

(1) Negatively.

The difficulty is not to be removed by seeking to eliminate the supernatural from the phenomenal results of prayer;

- A. By making the reflex influence upon the one praying the only goal to be reached thereby. Prayer involves a God who is in personal relations with men, who listens to their petitions and grants their requests.

NOTE—If reflex influence were the only benefit of prayer, it would be a mere spiritual gymnastic—an effort to lift one's self from the ground by tugging at his bootstraps, or like the Baron Munchausen of whom the story is told that he pulled himself out of the bog in China by tugging away at his own pigtail. David Hume said truly, "We can make use of no expression or even thought in prayers and entreaties which does not imply that these prayers have an influence." Prayer is not the reflex action of my will upon itself, but rather the communion of two wills, in which the finite comes into connection with the Infinite, and, like the trolley, appropriates its purpose and power."

- B. The true solution of the problem is not to be found by teaching that God answers prayer only along spiritual lines or in the spiritual realm, such as the action of the Holy Spirit upon the spirit of man.—The realm of spirit is no less subject to law than the realm of matter. Scripture and experience, moreover, alike testify that, in answer to prayer, events take place in the outward world which would not have taken place if prayer had not gone before.

NOTE—According to this second theory, God feeds the starving Elijah, not by a distinct message from heaven but by giving a compassionate disposition to the widow of Zarephath so that she is moved to help the prophet, I Kings 17:9—"behold, I have commanded a widow there to sustain thee." But God could also feed Elijah by the ravens and the angel (I Kings 17:4; 19:15); and the pouring rain that followed Elijah's prayer (I Kings 18:42-45) cannot be explained as a subjective phenomenon.

- C. The question cannot be satisfactorily answered by maintaining that God suspends natural law or breaks in upon the order of nature to gratify every desire expressed, or to fulfil every wish made known on the part of man.—This view does not take account of natural laws as having objective existence, and as revealing the order of God's being. Omnipotence might thus suspend natural law, but wisdom, as far as we can see, would not.

NOTE—This third theory might well be held by those who see in nature no force but the all-working will of God. But the properties and powers of nature are revelations of the Divine will, and the human will has only a relative independence in the universe. To expect that God would grant our every wish is to desire omnipotence without omniscience. All true prayer is, therefore, an expression of the one petition: "Thy will be done" (Matt. 6:10). E. G. Robinson: "It takes much common sense to pray and many prayers are destitute of this quality."

- D. The mystery is not explained by considering prayer as a physical force, linked in each case to its answer, as physical cause is linked to physical effect.

NOTE—We educate our children in two ways: first, by training them to do for themselves what they can do; and, secondly, by encouraging them to seek our help in matters beyond their power. So God educates us, first, by impersonal law, and, secondly, by personal dependence. He teaches us both to work and to ask. Notice the perfect un wisdom of modern scientists who place themselves under the training of impersonal law, to the exclusion of that higher and better training which is under personality.

(2) Positively.

Prayer is seen to be plausible from the viewpoint of both Scripture and true reason, by acknowledging that God may answer, even when that answer involves changes in the sequences or successive actions of nature.

- A. By new combinations or arrangements of natural forces in regions withdrawn from our observation, so that effects are produced which these same forces, left to themselves, would never have accomplished. As man combines the laws of chemical attraction and of combustion to fire the gun powder and split the rock asunder, so God may combine the laws of nature to bring about the answers to prayers. In all this there may be no suspension or violation of law, but a use of law unknown to us.

NOTE—"Nature is uniform in her processes but not in her results. Do you say that water cannot run up hill? Yes, it can and does. Whenever a man constructs a mill-dam the water runs up the surrounding hills till it reaches the top of the mill-dam. Man can make a spark of electricity do his bidding. Why cannot God use a bolt of electricity? Laws are not our masters, but our servants. They do our bidding all the better because they are uniform. And our servants are not God's masters." Hopkins, Sermon on the Prayer-gauge.

"The system of natural laws is far more flexible in God's hands than it is in ours. We act on second causes externally; God acts on them internally. We act upon them at only a few isolated points; God acts upon every point of the system at the same time. The whole of nature may be as plastic to His will as the air in the organs of the great singer who articulates it into a fit expression of every thought and passion of his soaring soul." Hodge, Popular Lectures, 45, 99.

Since prayer is nothing more nor less than appeal to a personal and present God, whose granting or withholding of the requested blessing is believed to be determined by the prayer itself, we must conclude that prayer moves God, or in other words, induces the putting forth on His part of an imperative volition.

"I kindle a fire in my grate. I only intervene to produce and combine together the different agents whose natural action behoves to produce the effect I have need of; but the first step once taken, all the phenomena constituting combustion engender each other, conformably to their laws, without a new intervention of the agent; so that an observer who should study the series of these phenomena, without perceiving the first hand that had prepared all, could not seize that hand in any especial act, and yet there is a preconceived plan and combination." Janet, Final Causes, 219.

Man, by sprinkling plaster on his field, may cause the corn to grow more luxuriantly; by kindling great fires and by firing cannon, he may cause rain; and God can surely, in answer to prayer, do as much as man can.

- B. God may have so prearranged the laws of the material universe and the events of history that, while the answer to prayer is an expression of His will, it is granted through the working of natural agencies, and in perfect accordance with the general principle that results, both temporal and spiritual, are to be attained by intelligent creatures through the use of the appropriate and appointed means.

NOTE—The Jacquard loom, of itself, would weave a perfectly uniform plain fabric; the perforated cards determine a selection of the threads, and through a combination of these variable conditions, so complex that the observer cannot follow their intricate working, the predesigned pattern appears. The most formidable objection to this theory is the apparent countenance it lends to the doctrine of necessitarianism. But if it presupposes that free actions have been taken into account, it cannot easily be shown to be false. The bishop who was asked by his curate to sanction prayers for rain was unduly sceptical when he replied: "First consult the barometer." Phillips Brooks: "Prayer is not the conquering of God's reluctance, but the taking hold of God's willingness."

The Pilgrims at Plymouth, somewhere about 1628, prayed for rain. They met at 9. A. M., and continued in prayer for eight or nine hours. While they were assembled, clouds gathered, and the next morning began rains which, with some intervals, lasted fourteen days. John Easter was many years ago an evangelist in Virginia. A large out-door meeting was being held. Many thousands had assembled, when heavy storm clouds began to gather. There was no shelter to which the multitudes could retreat. The rain had already reached the adjoining fields when John Easter cried: "Brethren, be still, while I call upon God to stay the storm till the gospel is preached to this multitude!" Then he knelt and prayed that the audience might be spared the rain, and that after they had gone to their homes there might be refreshing showers. Behold, the clouds parted as they came near, and passed to either side of the crowd and then closed again, leaving the place dry where the audience had assembled, and the next day the postponed showers came down upon the ground that had been the day before omitted.

Since God is Immanent in nature, an answer to prayer, coming about through the intervention of natural law, may be as real a revelation of God's personal care as if the laws of nature were suspended, and God interposed by an exercise of His creative power. Prayer and its answers though having God's immediate volition as their connecting bond, may yet be provided for in the original plan of the universe. The universe does not exist for itself, but for moral ends and for moral beings, to reveal God and to furnish facilities of intercourse between God and intelligent creatures.

2. The Principles of Prayer.

(1) Negatively considered.

At the threshold of this theme, over against all the invitations and promises, we meet certain awful admonitions and prohibitions. In some directions, there is a closed door before prayer. Even its boundless possibilities have a fixed limit, beyond which it is vain to attempt to go. God's restraints are not physical but moral. He can do anything that lies within the range of power, but He cannot deny Himself nor violate moral law. Because prayer pertains to the moral realm, it is subject to moral limitations, and these are its only boundaries. But he who would pray well, both believingly and prevailingly, must learn how far to go, and where to halt. It is of no use to knock at a door that cannot open, or beat our heads against a wall of adamant. We note some of these scriptural limitations.

A. Man's Barter is Irrevocable.

Esau sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and the birthright blessing went with the birthright heritage. Though Jacob got the blessing by fraud, behind his trickery, lay the permission of the God of the birthright. Jacob's crime of lying succeeded at his father's bedside, but Esau's crime of selling had forfeited what his brother fraudulently obtained. And, when the prophetic word had been spoken, it could not be unsaid. Esau sought with tears a change of mind in his father, but in vain. However Isaac himself might regret both Jacob's deceit and his own mistake, he had spoken in the name of God, who had permitted the blessing to go to the brother who had, in Esau's deliberate bargain and barter, bought the right to the birthright succession and all that went with it.

NOTE—There are many “profane persons,” and spiritual “fornicators,” like Esau, not a few of whom are in the church of God, who make a barter of spiritual privileges, opportunities, and blessings—a barter which not even repentance will undo; a forfeiture which not even prayer will restore. Even God cannot give back a lost day or hour. While life is before us, it may be used for God and humanity, or for self and carnality. If wrongly used, and so abused, how can the crime be undone! When life is behind us, it is no longer improvable, but irrevocable. We may repent of what is worse than waste, but the waste remains.

B. God's Decrees Are Irreversible.

When Moses again and again pleaded to be permitted to go over Jordan into the Land of Promise, and so complete his work of leadership, God finally said to him, “Speak no more to me of this matter, for thou shalt not go over this Jordan” (Deut. 3:25-27). He who was one of God's mightiest intercessors, ranking with such as Noah and Job, Samuel and Daniel, Elijah and Paul, was told by the very Jehovah whom he knew face to face, as no other had ever known Him, to desist.

NOTE—Moses had publicly dishonored God at Meribah by a second smiting of the once smitten rock—which was the type of Him who was once for all smitten for us—and yet he had been expressly told to speak to the rock, and knew that he was in no respect to depart from “the pattern showed him on the Mount.” God, for that offence, which undoubtedly had a deep typical bearing, determined that he should not enter with the people into the land of their inheritance; and His decree could not be changed even at Moses' prayer.

C. There are Limits of Fitness—a time for everything. Prayer cannot take the place of obedience. Only what is seasonable is also reasonable. Jehovah said, at the Red Sea, “Wherefore criest thou unto me! Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward!” It was not a time or place for mere supplication—asking was to give place to acting. The Lord had already given them assurance of their deliverance, and that He would fight for them and destroy their foes. It was not a time to breathe a prayer or cry aloud for help: That cry had been heard and answered, and prompt courageous action and advance were now demanded.

NOTE—We may prolong our prayers unduly, waiting on our face before God when He is commanding us to be up on our feet and going forward.

D. Discipline Has Its Necessities.

Prayer cannot always avert a providential blow.

NOTE—David had sinned a great sin—and sinned publicly. He had taken another man's wife and, to keep her, had put that other man out of the way; and now the child, born of that crime, was dying. David went, fasting and praying, before the Lord to plead for the life of the child. But Nathan said—“It shall surely die.” No prayer could avert that chastisement. God would not set a premium upon adultery, deception and murder. The fruit of that abominable and multiplied sin, must not abide. It was doomed. The penitent sinner still needed the scourge, and the Father could not spare His rod because of the child's cries.

E. Judicial Penalties also Set Limits.

Temporal judgments are sometimes necessary as sanctions of God's Law. Especially is this true of nations, which, as such, have no existence beyond this world, and whose penalties must come within the bounds of time. There are times when a whole nation has been guilty of some great wrong, and righteousness in God demands retribution.

NOTE—Though Job, Noah, Moses, Samuel and Daniel were together to appeal to God, His mind could not be toward His people, to save them from judgment (Jer. 15:1; Ezek. 14:4).

F. Intercession Has Its Limits.

Sometimes the cup of human iniquity becomes full and overflows. When that is the case no plea is of any avail. There is nothing left but a deluge of water or a rain of fire.

NOTE—Sodom could not be saved even by Abraham's importunity, nor Jerusalem by prophets' pleading, when even chief priests and rulers had conspired to put the Son of God to death, and followed His crucifixion by Stephen's stoning. The bounds of God's forbearance were passed. Sin had transcended the limits of even Divine patience. When the "three years" of letting alone, digging about and dunging the barren fig tree, had brought only new cumbering of the ground, the axe was irrevocably laid at the root of the tree.

G. Prayer is not to be Offered for One Who Has Committed a Sin which is unto Death: I John 5:16.

What this sin is, we may not be sure, perhaps, but because there is such a sin, it behooves us to beware, for no prayer can pierce that death shade.

NOTE—Alford makes it an appreciable act, the denying Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of God, which wilful, deliberate denial John elsewhere accounts a sufficient ground for not wishing a man "Godspeed," or receiving him into the house. But the state of apostasy which makes such act possible is undoubtedly included. This sin, whatever it be, is one which may be detected in a "brother"—a professed disciple—which makes the warning more terrible. And no fact is more significant than this—that, when a disciple has once radically departed from the faith and practice of Godliness, and even goes so far as to deny the Lord that bought him, and blaspheme His name, history may be safely challenged to produce one unmistakable case of restoration to his lost faith and love! If so history may perhaps be a sufficient expositor in this case.

(2) Positively considered.

A. It may be offered in the name of Jesus Christ, that is, by virtue of our identity with Him: John 16:23-27.

NOTE—In our Lord's lesson on Prayer, which is seven times urged in His last discourse on the eve of His death (John 14:13-24), He teaches the disciples the power of conscious unity and identity with Himself, which makes us even bolder than the sense of our sonship and God's Fatherhood. For it is plain that when we ask in Christ's name, He is the real petitioner. Whenever men use another's name as the authority for approach and appeal to a fellow man, and for a request that they could not urge without such sanction or warrant, it is obvious that he to whom the request is addressed looks past him who presents the petition to the party whom he sees behind the request and for whose sake he grants the favor. Because our name carries no weight, we use another's. So it is no irreverence to say that whenever we ask in the name of Christ, the Father looks past us, and sees His Son as the real suppliant. This is emphasized as a new lesson: "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name." No Old Testament saint, nor, up to that time, had any New Testament disciple, ever understood this high privilege, because the relation of Christ to His disciples had never been fully revealed.

- B. It must be according to the will of God, which is the will of infinite wisdom and infinite love: I John 5:14-15; Matt. 26:39-42.
- C. It is to be by the inward moving and intercession of the Spirit of God: Rom. 8:15, 26, 27; Jude 20.

NOTE—In this aspect of prayer we have God, the Spirit, Himself, who is pleading in us. He guides our desires, He shapes our utterance, if, indeed, the yearnings He awakens do not transcend all language; He displaces carnal by spiritual motives; He teaches us in conscious sonship to cry, "Abba, Father;" and Himself practically does the praying. See Eph. 2:18.

- D. It is inseparable from our calling and ordination to service: John 15:16.
- E. It finds access with boldness in the mediation and priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ: Heb. 4:15-16.
- F. It should be the expression of true spiritual desire, or yearning, as when David, as God's servant, found in his heart to pray a prayer unto Him: II. Sam. 7:27; Mark 11:24.
- G. It should be uttered in simple, trustful faith, the confidence of the child in God as a Father: Mark 11:24; I John 5:14-15; Heb. 11:6.
- H. It should be made in dependence upon the sacrificial work of Jesus Christ: Heb. 10:19-22, R. V.

NOTE—It is because of the death of Christ, which removed the barrier that stood between God and us so that He could not consistently hear and answer our prayers, that He can now hear and answer the prayers of His children.

3. Prohibitions with Reference to Prayer.

Satan knows the importance of prayer, so much so that he would bring and often does bring hindrances into the heart and life. These should be understood and avoided. Some of these are:

- (1) Wavering (R. V. "doubting"). The doubter is like the waves of the sea, driven by the wind. He must not expect an answer: Jas. 1:6, 7.
- (2) Asking amiss, to spend it in pleasures; Jas. 4:3.
- (3) Regarding iniquity in the heart: Psa. 66:18. Harboring envy, jealousy, ill-will, etc.
- (4) Refusing to forgive or to be forgiven: Matt. 5:23, 24; 6:12, 14, 15; Mark 11:25, 26.
- (5) Living in sin: Isa. 59:1-3; John 9:31.
- (6) Refusing to hear the law, the Word of God: Prov. 28:9; Zech. 7:11-13.
- (7) Refusing to hear the cry of the poor: Prov. 21:13.
- (8) Discord in the home: I Pet. 3:7.
- (9) Hypocrisy: Job 27:8, 9; Matt. 6:5.
- (10) Pride: Job 35:12, 13.
- (11) Robbing God: Mal. 3:8-10.
- (12) Idols in the heart: Jer. 11:9-14; Ezek. 8:15-18.
- (13) Offering unworthy service to God: Mal. 1:6-10.
- (14) Forsaking God: Jer. 14:10-12.

STUDY QUESTIONS ON SOTERIOLOGY.

1. Define Election.
2. Give three preliminary statements concerning the doctrine of Election, and quote one passage with each.
3. Give nine declarations, as scriptural proof of the doctrine of Election, and quote one passage with each.
4. What two erroneous views are refuted by the foregoing passages of Scripture?
5. Give the four-fold proof of the doctrine of Election from reason.
6. Give seven objections to the doctrine of Election, with answer for each.
7. Define Calling, and distinguish between the general or external, and the special or efficacious Call, quoting one passage with each.
8. Give the two-fold denial of the sincerity of God's general Call, with a reply to each.
9. Give the answer to the question, "Is God's special Call irresistible," with the two things which it implies.
10. What do the Scriptures declare concerning the believer's "Union with Christ"?
11. Give the five-fold symbolism of the believer's "Union with Christ," and quote one passage with each.
12. Give the Scriptural statements concerning the believer's "Union with Christ," and quote one passage with each.
13. Give the four-fold negative description of the believer's "Union with Christ."
14. Give the five-fold positive description of the believer's "Union with Christ," and quote one passage with each.
15. Define Regeneration.
16. Give the Biblical descriptions of Regeneration, and quote one passage with one of them.
17. Give three reasons for the necessity of Regeneration.
18. Give the two-fold view of the "human will," as the efficient cause of Regeneration, with reply to each.
19. Give the view of "truth," as the efficient cause of Regeneration, with two reasons for its rejection.
20. Give the meaning of the view of "the immediate agency of the Holy Spirit," as the efficient cause of Regeneration, and the two-fold argument in its favor.
21. Give the erroneous view concerning Baptism, as the instrumentality used in Regeneration, with the two-fold argument against it.
22. Give the Scriptural view of the instrumentality used in Regeneration, with the two inferences drawn therefrom.
23. Give the resultant relationship secured to the believer through Regeneration, and the things which are involved therein, both on the human and on the Divine side.
24. Discuss Sonship, as taught by the Greek word "Huiiothesia," in relation to the term, Adoption.

25. Define Conversion and give its two-fold manifestation.
26. Define the relation that Conversion sustains to Regeneration, and show how this two-fold representation may be explained.
27. Discuss the relation that Conversion sustains to subsequent acts of turning from sin to Christ.
28. Define Repentance.
29. Describe the essential elements involved in Repentance and quote one passage with each.
30. What distinction is found in the Romanist view of Repentance from that of the Scriptural doctrine with reference to its three elements?
31. Discuss the further considerations and qualifications of Repentance under the following heads; as an inward act; as a negative condition; its conjunction with Faith; its presence with true Faith.
32. Define Faith.
33. Describe the essential elements involved in Faith and give an illustration of the part played by each.
34. Discuss the further considerations and qualifications of Faith under the following heads; Faith, an act of the affections and will; the object of saving Faith; the ground of Faith; Faith and Works; Faith, as an act of reception; the increase of Faith.
35. Discuss the importance of the doctrine of Justification.
36. Define Justification; theoretically and relatively; according to language and usage of Scripture.
37. Discuss the elements involved in Justification, fully, and quote one passage with each.
38. Discuss the relationship sustained by Justification to the requirements of God's law and holiness, under A and B.
39. Discuss the relation of Justification to the believer's union with Christ and the work of the Spirit, under A and B.
40. Discuss Justification in its relation to faith.
41. What is it in Justification that makes peace and assurance possible?
42. Show how Justification can be instantaneous, complete, and final.
43. Give the three-fold negative definition of Sanctification.
44. Discuss the reply to Perfectionism, in which it is said to rest upon false conceptions.
45. Show that the theory of Perfectionism is not supported, but rather contradicted by the teaching of Scripture.
46. Show how the theory of Perfectionism is disapproved by the testimony of Christian experience.
47. Give the positive meaning of Sanctification.
48. Show from the Scriptures that the meaning of Sanctification and Holiness are largely the same.
49. What is the two-fold usage of the term "Sanctification" in the Scriptures?

50. Discuss the ceremonial or formal meaning of Sanctification and show its varied application to things and men, and also to God.
51. Discuss Sanctification with reference to its practical or moral meaning.
52. Discuss the three-fold time of the believer's Sanctification and quote one passage with each.
53. Describe the relation of the Persons of the Trinity to the work of Sanctification, and quote one passage with each.
54. Describe the instrumental agencies used in the believer's Sanctification, from the human side, and quote one passage with each.
55. What is the attitude taken by many with reference to the Plausibility of Prayer?
56. How is the difficulty in connection with Prayer and the fixity of law to be overcome, negatively considered, under the following heads; by making reflex influence the only goal; God answers prayer only along spiritual lines; God suspends natural law; Prayer, a physical force, linked in each case to its answer?
57. Discuss the difficulty in connection with Prayer and the fixity of law, from the positive side, under the following heads; by new combinations of natural forces; God may have pre-arranged the laws of the material universe.
58. What is met at the very beginning of the doctrine of Prayer over against its invitations and promises?
59. Discuss the Scriptural limitations to Prayer under the following heads: man's barter is irrevocable; God's decrees are irreversible; there are limits of fitness; discipline has its necessities; judicial penalties also set limits; intercession has its limits; not to be offered for one committing "sin unto death."
60. Describe the principles of Prayer, positively considered, and quote one passage with each.
61. Give the hindrances, which constitute prohibitions to prevailing prayer, and quote one passage with each.

CHAPTER EIGHT

ECCLESIOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF THE CHURCH

- A. DEFINITION AND EXPLANATION OF TERMS.
 - I THE ENGLISH WORD "CHURCH."
 - II THE GREEK WORD "ECCLESIA."
- B. THE TWO-FOLD APPLICATION OF THE TERM "CHURCH" (ECCLESIA) ACCORDING TO ITS NEW TESTAMENT USAGE.
 - I THE CHURCH IN ITS GENERAL ASPECT VIEWED AS AN ORGANISM.
 - II THE CHURCH IN ITS LOCAL ASPECT VIEWED AS AN ORGANIZATION.

Ecclesiology is the doctrine, or study, of the Church in its constitution, ordinances and activities, the last including both work and worship.

There is great danger of losing sight of the Church in the endeavor to emphasize the idea of the Kingdom of Heaven or Christendom. We are prone to think it a small thing to speak of the Church; the Kingdom and Christendom seem so large in comparison. We are tempted to distinguish and contrast Churchism, as it is sometimes called, and Christianity, to the disparagement of the former. It is well to remember: (1) Jesus Christ positively identifies Himself with the Church (Acts 9:1-5) and not with Christendom; (2) He gave up His life that He might found the Church (Eph. 5:25; (3) The Apostle Paul sacrificed himself in his endeavors to build up the Church, not Christendom (II Tim. 2:10; II Cor. 11:2, 23-28); (4) He speaks of his greatest sin as consisting in persecuting the Church of God (I Cor. 15:9); (5) The supreme business of God in this age is the gathering of the Church. ("To take out of them [nations] a people for His name." Acts 15:13-17. See also Eph. 4:12).

A. Definition and Explanations of Terms Used.

I The English word "Church."

The meaning of this term is determined by its etymology and by its past and present usage.

1. As determined by its etymology.

The English word "church" finds its nearest neighbor and sister in the Scotch "kirk," and next to that its cousin in the German "kirche." If it would find its mother, it would look to the old Saxon "circe," "cirice," or "cyrace." It is evident at a glance that all these are different forms of the same word. Whence did it come? Almost certainly from the Greek "kuriakon." This word, "to kuriakon," was used by the Greek Christians to designate the house of worship, and it seems clear that the Goths, and other Teutonic races, got the word, as they got their first knowledge of Christianity, from the Greek Christians. Now the word "kuriakon" is simply the adjective neuter from "kurios," Lord, and means that which is the Lord's, that is, the Lord's place, the Lord's house. This adjective is found in the New Testament, though not with reference to a place. (The passages are in I Cor. 11:20, in connection with the Lord's Supper, and in Rev. 1:10, the Lord's day). In early Greek Christian literature, the neuter adjective with the article came to be applied to the house of worship. In usage, the transition was easy from the building to the assembly which worshiped in the building. Thus the word "church" literally means the Lord's place, or the Lord's house, and from that it has been extended to all the various significations which it has acquired in the progress of language.

2. As Determined by its Past and Present Usage.

Interesting as its etymology is, the uses of the word in our own day and also throughout the history of the Church chiefly concern us here. Of these uses we may notice at least five:

- (1) A particular body of Christians organized for religious purposes and commonly meeting in one place for worship. This is the local church.
- (2) The general body, or sum total, of Christians, conceived of in the largest inclusive sense, or partially as represented in those under consideration at the time. This is the universal church.
- (3) The building where the local assembly meets for worship or other purposes. This does not occur in the New Testament, but as we have seen in the original meaning of "kuriakon," "church," and arose very early in Christian history.
- (4) A body or sect or denomination of Christians having the same general doctrines, organization and history, including and controlling local bodies of the same faith and order.

NOTE—This use of the word is not found in the New Testament, and very seldom in the times preceding the Reformation. It is distinctly a modern usage arising from the divisions of Christians. It is not accepted by all. Congregationalists, Baptists, and others who hold to the independency of the local churches do not designate any one of their co-operative bodies as a "church," nor call their total membership by that term, but reserve it to describe their local bodies.

- (5) A group of secondary and derived meanings, more or less vague, and growing out of the preceding, may be put together:
 - A. From the local sense, as in such phrases as "a member of the church," "going to church," and the adjective uses, as, "church meeting," "church affairs," etc.
 - B. From the general sense, as, "the Church," meaning the whole unorganized mass of Christians, "church and state," "church history," "church enterprises," "church people," and the like.
 - C. Somewhat wavering between the two, as "church order," "church polity," etc.

II The Greek Word "Ecclesia."

1. As Determined by its Etymology.

The word "ecclesia" is derived from "ec," out, and "caleo," to call; denoting in good Greek usage the assembly of citizens when called out from their homes to gathering places for the discussion of public business.

2. As Determined by its Past and Present Usage.

The word "ecclesia" came to mean in a general sense a gathering, or assembly, of people, even though they might not be summoned specifically for the transaction of public business. From this more general use the word passed to its employment in the Septuagint and the New Testament, where its usual meaning is that of assembly or congregation. In the Septuagint it is often used to translate the Hebrew "qahal," congregation. In the New Testament its usage may be best discovered by studying the passages in which it occurs.

NOTE 1—There are a few passages in which the word does not mean church. In Acts 7:38, Stephen mentions the assembly, or congregation, of the people in the wilderness, most probably having in mind the great gathering of the people at Sinai when the law was given. To translate the word "church" in this connection is manifestly wrong, and the Revised Version has very properly used "congregation" instead. In the 19th chapter of Acts, in reference to the uproar at Ephesus, the word occurs several times, but certainly not in the sense of the church. In verses 41, and 40 as is evident from the connection, the word simply means the coming together of the people—the crowd. This is not strictly speaking a proper use of the word and does not seem to occur elsewhere. In verse 39, there is reference to the lawful assembly as opposed to the confused crowd, and this usage accords with the common classic signification of an assembly of the citizens. In Hebrews 2:12, there is a quotation from the Septuagint version of Psalm 22:22, "In the midst of the congregation will I sing praise to thee." Here there is no description of the New Testament church as such, but simply of a worshipping congregation. Still it is a suggestive fact that the word occurs in this quotation from the Greek version of the Old Testament. In all the remaining passages of the New Testament, the word "ecclesia" is correctly translated church.

NOTE 2—"Church," "ecclesia;" "ec," out; "caleo," to call or summon, Matt. 16:18, is the first occurrence of this word in the New Testament. Originally an assembly of citizens, regularly summoned. So in the New Testament, Acts 19:39. The Septuagint uses the word for the congregation of Israel, either as summoned for a definite purpose (I Kings 8:65), or for the community of Israel collectively, regarded as a congregation (Gen. 28:3), where assembly is given for multitude in the margin. In New Testament, of the congregation of Israel (Acts 7:38); but for this there is more commonly employed "synagoge," of which synagogue is a transcription; "syn," together; "ago," to bring (Acts 13:43). In Christ's words to Peter, the word "ecclesia," acquires special emphasis from the opposition implied in it to the synagoge. The Christian community in the midst of Israel would be designated as "ecclesia," without being confounded with the "synagoge," the Jewish community. See Acts 5:11; 8:1; 12:1; 14:23, 27, etc. Nevertheless "synagoge" is applied to a Christian assembly in James 2:2, while "epi-synagoge" (gathering or assembling together) is found in II Thes. 2:1; Heb. 10:25. Both in Hebrew and in New Testament usage "ecclesia" implies more than a collective or national unity; rather a community based on a special religious idea and established in a special way. In the New Testament, the term is used also in the narrower sense of a single church, or a church confined to a particular place. So of the church in the house of Aquila and Priscilla (Rom. 16:5); the church at Corinth, the churches in Judea, the church at Jerusalem, etc.

B. The Two-fold Application of the Term "Church" (Ecclesia) According to its New Testament Usage.

I The Church in its General Aspect Viewed as an Organism.

1. Definitions of the Church.

(1) Negatively considered.

A. It is not synonymous or identical with the Kingdom of Heaven. The phrase, kingdom of heaven (lit. of the heavens), is peculiar to Matthew and signifies the Messianic earth rule of Jesus Christ, the Son of David. It is called the kingdom of heaven because it is the rule of the heavens over the earth (Matt. 6:10). The phrase is derived from Daniel, where it is defined (Dan. 2:34-36, 44; 7:23-27) as the kingdom which "the God of heaven" will set up after the destruction by the "stone cut out without hands" of the Gentile world-system. It is the kingdom covenanted to David's seed (II Sam. 7:7-10); described in the prophets (Zech. 12:8, note, Scofield Bible); and confirmed to Jesus Christ, the Son of Mary, through the angel Gabriel (Luke 1:32, 33).

The Kingdom of heaven has three aspects in Matthew: 1st, "at hand" from the beginning of the ministry of John the Baptist (Matt 12:46-50); 2nd, in seven "mysteries of the kingdom of heaven," to be fulfilled during the present age (Matt. 13:1-52), to which are to be added the parables of the kingdom of heaven which were spoken after those of Matthew 13, and which have to do with the sphere of Christian profession during this age; 3rd, the prophetic aspect—the kingdom to be set up after the return of the King in glory (Matt. 24:29-25:46; Luke 19:12-19; Acts 15:14-17). The kingdom of heaven is thus seen to be a distinctive Scriptural term having a three-fold application, but in neither of these is it identical with the Church, the Body of Christ. The latter, however, is included in the kingdom of heaven in its present mystery form, as is the whole sphere of Christian profession.

NOTE—A series of contrasts between the church of God and the Kingdom of heaven which show that they are not one and the same:

A. Contrast in the Names.

1. The names are never used interchangeably in Scripture.
2. The Church is composed of individual believers, "called out ones," a minority, Members of His Body. The Kingdom is composed of subjects, and includes the whole nation of Israel.

B. Contrast of the Place of Each in the Economy of God.

1. The Church belongs to the age of grace; the Kingdom, in its manifestation, to the millennial age.
2. The Church belongs to the present age; the Kingdom, to a future age.
3. The Church is unknown in the Old Testament; the Kingdom, spoken of everywhere in the Old Testament.
4. The Church was a secret or mystery until Paul's day (Eph. 3:5-9; Col. 1:26; Rom. 16:25, 26); the Kingdom was no secret, but was looked for, longed for, prayed for, and expected by every Old Testament seer and saint since David's day.
5. The Church is the special theme of Paul's epistles. The Kingdom is never mentioned in Paul's epistles.

C. Contrast in Terminology.

1. The Church is called "His Body." Christ is called the "Head of the Church" (Eph. 1:22; 5:15; Col. 1:18). In the Kingdom, the Messiah is to be "the King." He is never designated as "The King of the Church."
2. The Church is spoken of as being "Built" upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets (Eph. 4:8-11; 3:5; 2:20-22; I Cor. 3:9; Col. 2:7). The Kingdom is said to be "set up" (Dan. 2:44. See also Acts 15:16).
3. The Church, when completed, is to be taken away from the earth into heaven (I Thes. 4:13-18). The Kingdom, when set up, is to remain here on the earth (Psa. 145:13).
4. The Church is a family,—God's heavenly family (Eph. 3:15). The Kingdom is a people,—God's earthly people.
5. The Church is composed of believers who have in Christ lost all identity as Jews or Gentiles (Col. 2:11). In the Kingdom national distinctions are to be preserved.

D. Contrast in Destiny.

1. The Church is heavenly in destiny (Phil. 3:20, 21). The Kingdom is earthly in destiny (Dan. 2:44; Zech. 14:9).
2. The Church is to be "caught up" into glory (I Thes. 4:13-18). The Kingdom is to remain upon the earth (Zech. 14:9).
3. The Glory of the Church is celestial (Col. 1:27). The glory of the Kingdom is terrestrial (Dan. 7:13, 14, 27).

E. Contrast in Proclamation and Presentation.

1. The Gospel of the Grace of God is the message of the Church (the good news of God's grace): Acts 20:24; Rom. 1:1. The Gospel of the Kingdom is the message in connection with the Kingdom (the good news of the Messianic Kingdom): Matt. 4:23; 24:14.
2. The Gospel of the Glory is another phase of the message of the Church (I Tim. 1:11; II Cor. 4:4). The Everlasting Gospel is another phase of the message of the Millennial Kingdom (Rev. 14:6, 7).

B. It is not synonymous or identical with the Kingdom of God. The Kingdom of God is that sphere or realm in which God is acknowledged and obeyed as Sovereign, and is comprised of all unfallen created intelligences as well as that part of the human race which is included in the redemption which is in Christ Jesus.

NOTE 1—The Kingdom of God is to be distinguished from the Kingdom of heaven (see above) in five respects:

- A. The Kingdom of God is universal, including all moral intelligences willingly subject to the will of God, whether angels, the Church, or saints of past or future dispensations (Luke 13:28, 29; Heb. 12:22, 23); while the Kingdom of heaven is Messianic, Mediatorial, Davidic, and has for its object the establishment of the Kingdom of God in the earth (I Cor. 15:24, 25).
- B. The Kingdom of God is entered only by the new birth (John 3:3, 5-7); the Kingdom of heaven, during this age, is the sphere of a profession which may be real or false (Matt. 13; 25:1, 11, 12).
- C. Since the Kingdom of heaven is the earthly sphere of the universal Kingdom of God, the two have almost all things in common. For this reason many parables and other teachings are spoken of the Kingdom of heaven in Matthew, and of the Kingdom of God in Mark and Luke. It is the omissions which are significant. The parables of the wheat and tares, and the net (Matt. 13:24-30, 36-43, 47-50) are not spoken of the Kingdom of God. In that Kingdom, there are neither tares nor bad fish. But the parable of the leaven (Matt. 13:33) is spoken of the Kingdom of God also, for, alas, even the true doctrines of the Kingdom are leavened with the errors of which the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians were the representatives.
- D. The Kingdom of God "Comes not with outward show" (Luke 17:20), but is chiefly that which is inward and spiritual (Rom. 14:17); while the Kingdom of heaven is organic, and is to be manifested in glory on the earth.
- E. The Kingdom of heaven merges into the Kingdom of God when Christ, having "put all enemies under His feet," "shall have delivered up the Kingdom to God, even the Father" (I Cor. 15:24-28).

NOTE 2—The Kingdom of God is a generic term which includes in its force and scope all the other designations of the true Kingdom. The Kingdom of heaven must be the Kingdom of God, but the Kingdom of God is not necessarily always the same as the Kingdom of heaven, otherwise both terms would not be employed by Matthew. If Matthew had spoken only of the Kingdom of heaven, and Mark and Luke only of the Kingdom of God, there might have been good reason for concluding the two expressions were absolutely identical; but the fact that Matthew five times over refers to the Kingdom of God in a book where the Kingdom of heaven is mentioned thirty-two times surely intimates that the two terms are to be distinguished, no matter how closely they may resemble each other in certain respects. That in certain respects the two expressions are very similar in their scope is clear, and that some of the things predicated of the former are also predicated of the latter cannot be denied, yet the additional fact that "the Kingdom of heaven" which occurs so frequently in Matthew's Gospel—the design of which is to set forth the offer of the Messianic Kingdom to the Jews, their refusal to comply with the terms of its offer, and the consequences ensuing from their refusal—is never once used by Mark, Luke or John, ought to show that it does bear a different significance from "the Kingdom of God" which is the phrase invariably employed by the other Evangelists.

The Kingdom of God as administered in Israel of old, whether in the immediate theocracy or by Saul, or David and his sons, was not the "Kingdom of heaven," for its center of dominion and throne were on the earth. "The Kingdom of heaven" in the first twelve chapters of Matthew has an entirely different force and scope from that which it has in the later chapters. In Matthew the Kingdom which John announced as "at hand" was the Messianic Kingdom of Old Testament prophecy, whereas, in the parables of Matthew 13, etc., the "Kingdom of heaven" has reference to the Christian profession. Yet both of these significations of the "Kingdom of heaven," are spoken of as the Kingdom of God in the other Gospels. It would therefore be as Scriptural to say that the "Kingdom of heaven" in Matthew 3 is the Kingdom of God, as it would be to say that the "Kingdom of heaven" in Matthew 13 is the Kingdom of God also, but it would not be accurate to say of other Scriptures that the Kingdom of God is synonymous with the "Kingdom of heaven" except we qualify our words by adding which aspect of the "Kingdom of heaven" we are referring to. For instance, when we read in Romans 14:17 "for the Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit," the Kingdom of God cannot here be the equivalent of the "Kingdom of heaven" which the Baptist announced as recorded in Matthew 3:2, but it would correspond with the "Kingdom of heaven" as it is used in the parables of Matthew 13, providing we understand by it the reality of that which is there professed.

NOTE 3—A series of contrasts between the Church and the Kingdom of God.

- A. The Kingdom of God belongs to all time, i.e., it is contemporaneous with the universe. The Church had a specific beginning in time,—the Day of Pentecost.
- B. The Kingdom of God includes both heavenly and earthly beings. The Church includes earthly beings only.
- C. The Kingdom of God includes unfallen intelligences as well as redeemed men. The Church includes only redeemed men.
- D. The Kingdom of God includes all the redeemed of all ages. The Church includes only those who are redeemed from Pentecost to Parousia, from the resurrection of Christ to His second advent.
- C. It is not synonymous or identical with Christendom. The term Christendom has a two-fold usage. In its limited use it refers to the professing church or all who make nominal profession of the Christian faith. In its wider significance it has a territorial application and comprises those countries in which Christianity prevails or which is more or less controlled by Christian influences, i.e., nominally Christian lands, as opposed to distinctively heathen lands.

(2) Positively considered.

The Church is a body of persons called out by the power of God to faith in a crucified and risen Christ, having had wrought in them by the Spirit, through the Word, the nature of the risen Christ, indwelt by the Spirit, made members one of another, and linked by that Spirit to the risen Man in the heavens.

NOTE—"The Church is a company of people called out from the world, separated from sin, belonging to God, worshipers of God, redeemed by, belonging to, and controlled by Christ, a people by whom God is glorified, the pillar and ground of the truth, and a monument of the manifold wisdom of God: John 15:19; Acts 15:14; Eph. 4:17; I John 2:15-17; I Tim. 3:15; Eph. 3:10; Phil 3:3; John 4:23, 24; Eph. 3:21; I Tim. 3:16, 17; I Cor. 15:1-4; Acts 20:28; I Cor. 10:32; 11:22; 15:9; I Tim. 3:5; I Pet. 1:18, 19; Eph. 5:24-26; Rom. 16:16." H. S. Miller.

"The Church is a religious assembly selected and called out of the world by the doctrine of the Gospel, to worship the true God in Christ, according to His Word." Cruden.

"The Church is the collective body of Christians; all who are in spiritual union with Christ, acknowledging Him as their head; a spiritual society separated from the world, opposed to the world." New International Dictionary.

A. Membership of the Church as an Organism.

The word Church literally means a called out company and, therefore, it comprises only those who are truly called out from the world by Christ unto Himself, in other words, all true believers wherever found. It is not the aggregate of all churches, composed as they are at present of both true and false professors, nor is it any particular church on earth, although some churches have formed themselves into what they call a church of the whole, or a catholic church; but it may be seen from the meaning of the word, if the Church should ever embrace all the world and become universal, it would cease to be a Church or called out company.

The Christian election differs from the Jewish in this respect. The Jewish election was national, one nation being separated from the other nations of the earth. The Christian election is individual, its members being taken out of all nations, tribes and tongues.

B. The Unity of the Church as an Organism.

The unity of the Church is not external, consisting in intellectual belief or form of government; it is wholly spiritual and a result of the unifying power of the Holy Spirit. John 17:21; Rom. 12:5; Gal. 3:28; Eph. 4:13.

2. The Revelation of the Church.

(1) Foretold by Christ.

"On this rock I will build my Church," (Matt. 16:18). Here is the Church in prophecy and promise, the first mention of the Church in the New Testament. The Church was not in existence during the earth life of Jesus; but its establishment was promised and predicted by Him. It was founded on Peter's confession of Jesus Christ as the Son of the Living God.

(2) Revealed through Paul.

The Church, doctrinally, was alone fully revealed to Paul and by him communicated to man (Eph. 3:1-9).

3. The Symbolism of the Church.

The relationships existing between Christ and the Church are set forth in a variety of symbols. This symbolism consists of numerous descriptive terms applied to the Church.

(1) The Church is spoken of as the "New Man."

"To make in Himself one new man," (Eph. 2:15)—a new, immortal, divine race of men; which is the ultimate answer to God's proposition in Gen. 1:26, "Let us make man in our image." In Genesis we find that Adam and Eve were called by a common name: "He called their name Adam," Gen. 5:2. Adam and Eve, typically, set forth Christ and His Church; therefore, we find that Christ and His Church have a common name, I Cor. 12:12. The word "Christ" here is preceded by the article, "the," the literal meaning thus being "the Christ;" and so the name Christ is given to the Church, as the Body of Him Who is called, also, the Christ.

(2) The Church is spoken of as the "Body of Christ."

Two ideas are contained in this symbol: first, the Church has a relation which it sustains to Christ, who is its Head (Eph. 1:22, 23; Col. 1:18; 2:19). The Church, in this aspect, is an organism, not an organization. There is a vital relation between Christ and the Church, both partaking of the same life, just as there is between the physical head and the body. As the Head of the Church, Christ is its Guardian and Director (Eph. 5:23, 24); the Source of its life, filling it with His fullness (Eph. 1:23); the Center of its unity and the Cause of its growth (Eph. 4:15; Col. 2:19). Second, the Church has an internal relation sustained by its members toward each other (I Cor. 12:12-27; Rom. 12:4, 5; Eph. 4:1-4, 15, 16).

- (3) The Church is spoken of as the "Temple of God." The Church, as the Temple of God, is a building of which Christ is the chief cornerstone, and the apostles and prophets the foundation (Eph. 2:20, 21; I Cor. 3:9-17; I Tim. 3:15; I Pet. 2:4-8). In I Cor. 3, Christ is said to be the foundation of the building, so that the other passages which refer to the foundation of the apostles and prophets must point to the foundational position which they occupy in the temple, Christ Himself being both the foundation and cornerstone of the entire structure.
- (4) The Church is spoken of as the "Bride of Christ." The Church is prospectively the Bride of Christ (Eph. 5:31, 32; Rev. 19:7; 21:9). Christ, "the Man," left His Father in heaven, and Mary, His mother, on earth; cutting off all ties, He was joined for death and life unto the Church as her Husband; she is His affianced, and the marriage must necessarily be in the future. See also II Cor. 11:2.

NOTE—As there is love and betrothal in the human relationship before the marriage, so there is also in the spiritual relationship. This union, though practically existing with each believer from the very time of his acceptance of Christ, is only fully consummated when the whole Church, made ready and perfected, is caught up to heaven and the marriage is celebrated in the heavenly regions (Rev. 19:5-9). Therefore, the first and only Hebrew word in the Apocalypse "alleluia," the supreme shout of praise, is not heard until this event takes place (Rev. 19:1).

The Church is to be associated with Christ in His Millennial reign, as a queen rules with her husband as royal consort. Her place is above angels, because she rules them (I Cor. 6:3). This fact seems to indicate that the sphere of government will be heavenly as well as earthly. There is a difference of opinion as to the abode of Christ and the glorified Church in their future reign, whether it will be upon or above the earth. Rev. 5:10 admits of either translation. Since, however, heaven and earth are but divisions of God's great realm, probably the saints will pass as easily from the one to the other as Christ did in the forty days of His resurrection life on earth.

4. Formation of the Church.

Historically, the Church had no existence before the resurrection of Christ (Eph. 3:1-5, 9, 10). The patriarchs, such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, were not in the Church; they were quickened by the Spirit, but not united to a risen Man in the Heavens; and this, from the simple fact that, at that time, such a person as a risen Man was not yet manifested. The Church had no existence when Christ was on earth; it was yet future (Matt. 16:18). The mission of Christ as the Minister of the Circumcision was exclusively to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (Rom. 15:8; Matt. 15:24; 10:5, 6; 27:37).

On the day of Pentecost, the Spirit was made manifest on the earth, as the witness of the risen, ascended Christ; and then, and there, the Lord baptized the disciples, in the Spirit, into the Body in which, and through which, He was henceforth to manifest Himself on the the earth (I Cor. 12:13). It was then that Christ deposited in this spiritual body, in the person of the Holy Spirit, gifts and powers required for service in His name, the ascended Lord.

NOTE—In Acts 11, is the record of the Church passing out of the confines of Judaism. In Acts 13:42-44, is the record of the Church broadening out to receive the Gentiles.

II The Church in its Local Aspect Viewed as an Organization.

1. Definition of the Local Church.

The church in the individual or local sense may be defined as that smaller company of regenerate persons who, in any given community, unite themselves voluntarily together, in accordance with the principles, precepts, and purposes of Christ, as revealed in the New Testament.

NOTE 1—The above definition, of course, deals with the ideal church, or with a church defined according to the New Testament requirements. The ideal, however, has seldom if ever been the real or actual. Nevertheless, a regenerate church membership, living in obedience to the will of Jesus Christ as revealed in the New Testament, should be the standard maintained.

NOTE 2—By far the larger number of passages which refer to the church describe it as a local assembly of Christian believers. There is a small number, however, of very important places in which the word has a more general meaning. It is common to distinguish these two classes of meanings by the terms "local church" and "universal church." It seems, however, in some few passages that, while the local sense of the word is not clearly retained, and a more general signification is intended, still the church universal is not meant. Besides, the "church universal" is not itself a New Testament term, and there is no binding reason why it should be employed other than as a convenient designation. The better way is to distinguish between a local and a general meaning of the word church, rather than to press an unscriptural distinction between "church local" and "church universal," as if entirely different things were meant. For convenience of discussion, the passages may be divided into those which refer to some particular church or churches; and those which do not point to any specified church, and yet retain the local meaning of the term; and these may be further sub-divided into passages where the word is used in the singular and in the plural. The passages which describe some particular church, or churches, are as follows:

- A. Singular: Acts 5:11; 8:1; 11:22, 26; 12:1, 5; 13:1; 14:27; 15:3, 4, 22; 18:22; 20:17; Rom. 16:1 (23?); I Cor. 1:2; 6:4; II Cor. 1:1; Col. 4:16; I Thes. 1:1; II Thes. 1:1; III John 6, 9, 10; Rev. 2:1, 8, 12, 18; 3:1, 7, 14. Add here Rom. 16:5; I Cor. 16:19; Col. 4:15; Philem. 2.
- B. Plural: Acts 15:41; I Cor. 16:1; II Cor. 8:1 (18?), 19, (23?); 11:8; Gal. 1:2, 22; I Thes. 2:14; Rev. 1:11; 2:7; 11, 17, (23?), 29; 3:6; (22:16?).

There are passages which do not refer to any specified church, and yet clearly exemplify the local meaning. Here again the word is used both in the singular and plural. They are as follows:

- A. Singular: Matt. 18:17; Acts 14:23; I Cor. 4:17; fl:18, 22; 14:4-35; Phil. 4:15; I Tim. 3:5; 5:16; James 5:14.
- B. Plural: Acts 16:5; Rom. 16:4; I Cor. 7:17; 11; 16; 14:33, 34; II Cor. 8:18, 23, 24; 11:28; 12:13; II Thes. 1:4; Rev. 2:23; 22:16.

2. The Organization of the Local Church.

(1) Its Formation.

There is no account of the act or mode of procedure by which any church mentioned in the New Testament was organized, or constituted. The probabilities are that the method was very simple, that the Apostles, or leaders authorized by them, merely recognized the believers in Christ in any one place as a church without any formal or ceremonious act of constitution. We should infer that there would be services of worship, and doubtless something in the nature of a covenant, or agreement of the members with each other to serve the Lord and maintain the worship and ordinances of His appointment. But this is simply inference; there is no explicit statement.

NOTE—Each church was an organized body or society, and not simply a loose assembly or meeting. One or two passages may possibly bear the meaning of a "congregation," or "meeting," as the significance of the word "ecclesia," but the overwhelming implication, where the churches are mentioned, or even alluded to as such, is that they were organized bodies and not mere aggregations of followers of Christ. This appears from the names, location, and other characteristics of the New Testament churches. For example, the churches at Jerusalem and Antioch mentioned in Acts could not be regarded as mere gatherings or meetings of the believers who lived at those places. They are mentioned in such a way as to make the invariable impression that they were definite bodies of persons. Even more clearly does this appear from the Epistles to individual churches which were addressed as if they were organized bodies, as at Corinth, Philippi, Thessalonica, Rome; so also the seven churches so often mentioned in the early chapters of the Apocalypse.

(2) Its Membership.

The members of the church are in every case, either by direct statement, or necessary implication, represented as actual disciples of Christ. This included, no doubt, in every instance, three particulars; namely, conversion (including regeneration, repentance, and faith), confession and baptism.

NOTE—It is not necessary to cite all the passages which bear on these points. A few on each will suffice.

- A. As to the requirement of conversion: John 3:3, 5; Acts 2:47; Rom. 1:6, 7; I Cor. 1:2; John 3:16, 18, 36; Acts 2:44; Rom. 1:8; Col. 1:2, 4.
- B. As to the requirement of confession: Matt. 10:32; Rom. 10:9, 10; I Tim. 6:12; I John 4:15.
- C. As to the requirement of baptism: Mark 16:15, 16; Acts 2:41; 8:12; Rom. 6:1-4.

(3) Its Officers.

In studying the officers of the New Testament churches, we have one of the most important and difficult matters connected with our general subject of church polity, and one which has had thorough investigation and discussion from every point of view; because, however, of the necessary limitations under which we are placed, we must confine ourselves to a limited discussion.

A rigid classification of the various offices is impossible for they often seem to touch and include each other. The best that we can do is to group the officers conveniently for discussion rather than to attempt any strict classification. But while exact classification has its difficulties, there yet seem to be a real distinction between those offices which were elective and permanent in the local churches and those which appear to be more general in character and of uncertain permanence. Besides these there are some official designations which offer special difficulties in interpretation. So in a general way we find three fairly distinct groups of officials mentioned in the New Testament:

A. Officers which are general.

Under this first division we consider apostles, prophets, teachers, and evangelists.

a. Apostles.

The Scripture passages which bear upon this office are: Matt. 10:2; Luke 6:13; 22:14; John 13:16; Acts 1:2, 15-26; 8:1, 14; 11:1; 14:14; 15:2-33; Rom. 1:1; I Cor. 1:1; 9:1, 2; 12:28; II Cor. 8:23; Gal. 1:1; Eph. 2:20; 3:5; 4:11; Phil. 2:25; Heb. 3:1; Rev. 18:20.

Without going into a detailed discussion of these passages, we simply set forth some plainly required qualifications for the apostolic office.

(a) The apostle must have a special call and mission. In the case of the original twelve and of Paul, the call came from the Master; the mission in all cases was to proclaim and teach the gospel, and apparently to found and form the churches.

(b) The apostle must be able to render personal testimony to the fact of Christ's resurrection. In the case of Matthias, this was distinctly required. It may be reasonably assumed for Barnabas, Andronicus and Junias, and is earnestly claimed by Paul as being true of himself.

(c) The apostle should have "the signs of an apostle." This seems to mean the power to work miracles as an evidence of apostolic authority. Along with it went, of course, the spiritual work and fruit of a divinely authorized and empowered messenger. Paul claimed these signs in I Cor. 9:2, and II Cor. 12:12.

(d) The apostle should be recognized as such by the rest of the apostolic company.

This appears in the prominence given to the Twelve by our Lord, in His special training of them for their work after His departure, in their assumption of their apostolic duties, and their brethren's recognition of their leadership among the disciples after the Ascension, and in many other familiar tokens found in Scripture. See in this connection I Cor. 9:4-6, where Paul claims this authority for himself.

NOTE—The foregoing discussion shows plainly that the office of apostle was not local but general. That it was not designed to be permanent is shown by the following:

A. There is no hint anywhere in the New Testament that the office was to be passed on to others.

B. The fact that personal witness to the resurrection of Christ was an indispensable qualification made it impossible to continue the office.

- C. No indication is to be found showing that the functions of an apostle without the name were to be transferred to any other set of officers and perpetuated in the churches after the apostolic age.

b. Prophets.

The passages alluding to this office are: Acts 11:27; 13:1; 15:32; 21:10; I Cor. 12:28; 14:29-40; Eph. 2:20; 3:5; 4:11 (compare James 5:10); Rev. 10:7; 11:10, 18; 16:6; 18:20-24; 22:6, 9. Compare with these Rom. 12:6; I Cor. 13:2.

The teachings of the foregoing passages concerning the the prophets of the New Testament dispensation and their office may be summarized as follows:

- (a) The prophets were not officers elected by the churches. There does not appear in any of the passages noted a trace of election to office. Rather were they men especially qualified and inspired of God for the benefit of the churches.
- (b) They are next in rank to the apostles. It is possible that all the apostles were prophets, but certainly not all the prophets were called apostles.
- (c) Their qualification was that of inspiration, sometimes for foretelling the future, as in the case of Agabus, who is mentioned in Acts 11:28 as predicting the famine, and in 21:10, 11 as foretelling the trials of Paul at Jerusalem. Generally, however, their function seems to have been, by Divine inspiration to receive and make known new truth, or to give to the brethren better insight into truth already known. In the fifteenth chapter of Acts, Judas and Silas are mentioned as prophets who exhorted the brethren. Prophecy was, therefore, rather a gift than an office, and was probably not confined to any office, but was given to individuals according as God chose and inspired them.

c. Evangelists.

In regard to evangelists there are only a few passages: Acts 21:8; Eph. 4:11; II Tim. 4:5. The statements concerning this office are very limited, and about all that we can say is that the evangelists seem to have been traveling preachers authorized by the apostles and the churches; that they went about preaching but without apostolic rank, and probably in most cases without prophetic inspiration. Their relations to individual churches are unknown, though it is likely that they were supported in their missionary tours by the contributions of their brethren at home, at least in part.

d. Teachers.

In regard to the teachers, we have the following Scripture: Acts 13:1; I Cor. 12:28, 29; Eph. 4:11; I Tim. 2:7; II Tim. 1:11; 4:3; Heb. 5:12; James 3:1. A study of these passages will reveal the probability that the teacher was not, properly speaking, an officer, but his teaching was rather a function which might be joined with other offices and not confined to a special office.

- B. Officers which are doubtful as to their functions. In I Cor. 12:28, along with the officers are mentioned "helps, governments." In this much discussed verse we have the offices of apostles, teachers, prophets; and the gifts of healing, or working miracles, of tongues. These last can hardly be considered as offices in any sense—certainly not as distinct and separate offices. The question is whether the remaining two terms, "helps, governments," constituted separate and distinct offices, and if so, what were they? It must be admitted that no entirely satisfactory interpretation has been found for this passage, but the best is that which takes the expression "governments," as expressing the duties of the elders in the general oversight of the church, and the phrase "helps," as expressing the duties of the deacons in the care of the poor, the sick and others. So that the offices of elder and deacon, which are not mentioned by name in the text, are at least brought in by notice of their functions. The "messengers of the churches," mentioned in II Cor. 8:23, where the word in the Greek is "apostle," may be regarded simply as those who were sent by the church upon a special mission. They were not permanent officers, but were appointed to collect and bear the gifts of the churches to the poor saints at Jerusalem. The expression, "the angel of the church," in Rev. 2 and 3, doubtless refers to the regenerate portions of the membership of the seven churches in Asia.

NOTE—The seven stars spoken of in Rev. 1:16-20 are there said to be the seven angels of the seven churches. Angels and stars are symbolical figures. The application of these terms to church officers or bishops and pastors is incorrect. Stars are used in Scripture to typify true believers. Stars are heavenly bodies which shine during the night; so are true believers in a heavenly position with the responsibility to shine in the night. The lampstands represent the visible, professing church; stars represent the true believing element in the Church. They are in the right hand of Christ, held securely there. Furthermore, only true believers have an ear to hear what the Spirit saith. The stars are called angels because an angel is a messenger and true believers are likewise that.

C. Officers which are local and permanent.

Among the officers of the New Testament churches there were those that were local and designed to be permanent. These were the elders, called also bishops and pastors, and the deacons.

a. Elders, bishops and pastors.

The passages in which the elders appear as church officers are as follows: Acts 11:30; 14:23; 15:2, 4, 6, 22, 23; 16:4; 20:17; 21:18; I Tim. 5:17, 19; Titus 1:5; James 5:14; I Pet. 5:1; II John 1; III John 1. This term is by far the most frequently used of them all. This probably grew out of the fact that it was already an established word among the Jews, and while it describes the same office as the other two, bishops and pastors, it has rather the idea of maturity and experience, thus describing the character of the officer rather than the function of the office. Another term for this office is "bishop." There are only a few places where this term appears: Acts 20:28; Phil. 1:1; I Tim. 3:1, 2; Titus 1:7. The word bishop from the Greek (episcopos) means literally an overseer, and in the margin of the Revised Version is so rendered. This title of overseer as applied to an officer in the church looks rather to the functions of the office than to the character of the officer, describing his care, his outlook upon those who are committed to his keeping, as a leader, guide, and teacher. It carries with it more of the idea of authority and rule than does that of elder. The third title for this same office is that of "pastor." There is only one passage where the word is used, that is Eph. 4:11, where, in describing the gifts bestowed on the Church by the ascended Christ, the Apostle says, "and some pastors and teachers." This term seems to to have in it the thought of shepherding. See John 10:11; Heb. 13:20; Acts 20:28; I Pet. 2:25. Thus the term pastor, "shepherd," involves the personal tending and spiritual concern which the bishop-elder should exercise over his flock.

NOTE—The duties of the office were oversight, general direction of affairs, especially spiritual, of the church. This is involved in all three of the terms employed, and in much else; such as the directions given, the qualifications required and work enjoined. Another function was teaching, preaching, edifying the church. This especially appears in the passage in Ephesians where it is said, "some pastors and teachers for the edifying of the church," and in I Timothy 3:2, where among the qualifications of the bishop it is said that he must be "apt to teach," and in I Timothy 5:17, where the "elders that rule well" are mentioned, and then they are described as those who "labor in word and doctrine."

b. Deacons.

The Greek word "diaconos" simply means a servant and in that sense it is often found. There are two passages where the word is used in the official sense: Phil. 1:1; I Tim. 3:8-13. While the word in its general signification means a servant, it is clear that it came to be used of a church officer, and this very probably originated in the event mentioned in the sixth chapter of Acts, where the "seven" were set apart to attend to the distribution of the common fund for the benefit of those who needed it.

NOTE—Perhaps it would be going too far to say that these seven referred to in Acts 6 were actually deacons, in the later sense, of the church at Jerusalem. Two of them, Philip and Stephen, also preached. But thus early in the history of the church it was felt that servants, or officers, to look after the business affairs, were needed, so that the spiritual teachers and guides might give more of their time and attention to the ministry of the word and the devotions of the church.

(4) Its Functions.

The local church was possessed of certain rights, duties, and privileges of management and direction:

A. The regulation of its own members.

This in turn involves three things:

a. Their reception.

This is argued from the fact that it is the natural right of any society to pass upon the applications of those who would become members and determine the matter by vote. It is also involved in the right to exclude from membership which was sometimes a duty of the church. See in this connection Acts 9:26 and Rom. 14:1.

b. Their discipline.

This is taught in such passages as: Matt. 18:17; Rom. 16:17; I Cor. 5:1-5; II Cor. 2:6-8; Gal. 6:1; I Thes. 5:14; II Thes. 3:6, 14, 15.

These passages indicate that it was the duty of the church to exercise a watchful supervision over its members, to punish their delinquencies, to rebuke them, and in some cases even to withdraw from them, or to exclude them from the fellowship of the church.

c. Their edification.

This is taught in the following passages: Eph. 4:11-16; I Cor. chaps. 12 to 14; Col. 3:12-17.

The church is here commanded to edify itself in love, to purge itself from disorders, and to hold fast to the Head, even Christ, making increase of the body. It is the duty of the church to attend to its own orderly growth and to the spiritual nurture and development of its individual members.

B. The election of its officers, servants and messengers.

This is shown by the following passages: Acts 6:1-6; 15:22; II Cor. 8:23; Phil. 2:25.

Some appointments may have been made by the apostles, but doubtless they acted under the direction of the local churches or in co-operation with them by whom these appointments were endorsed or confirmed. See in this connection Acts 14:23; Titus 1:5.

- C. The maintenance of worship and the ordinances. This is taught in the following passages: Acts 1:13, 14; 2:1, 42, 46, 47; 11:26; 13:1, 2; I Cor. 14.

In I Cor. 11, the Apostle gives extended directions about the observance of the Lord's Supper, rebuking the Corinthian church for their misconceptions and unseemly conduct in regard to that sacred rite. This, together with the foregoing passages, shows the maintenance of worship and the ordinances to be one of the recognized functions of the local church.

- D. The management of its own affairs.

Each church judged for itself and acted for itself as a unit, and attended to its own business; I Cor. 14:40. This is to be inferred from the natural reason that any organized body is properly charged with the management of its own affairs; besides that, the general tenor of the Scripture language is such as to show this; then the descriptions of the churches, the responsibilities enjoined upon them, and the commands given to them indicate that they were charged with the direction and control of their own concerns.

3. The Ordinances of the Local Church.

- (1) Definition of the term ordinance.

The word "ordinance is derived from the Latin "ordo," a row or order, and so "ordinare" meant to put in the right place in the row, or set in order, and then consequently to establish, to command; so that "ordinance" comes to mean something established, commanded, enforced by proper authority, and the term has been applied to the sacred rites of Baptism and the Lord's Supper as institutions, or commandments of the Lord.

- (2) The purpose of the ordinances.

The ordinances are certain symbolic acts which Christians are commanded to observe as setting forth great truths of their religion. The purpose of the ordinances may be set forth in three parts, all of which are essential to a complete statement:

- A. They symbolize by vivid action essential Christian truth, expressing in an outwardly observed rite, inwardly accepted and fundamental Christian doctrine.

- B. They are to be kept as observances for the sake of the Lord Jesus, in simple obedience to His positive commands and in grateful recognition of His claims to our love and duty.
- C. They are, therefore, distinctively Christian ceremonies, marking those who rightly observe them as the true followers of Jesus Christ.

(3) The custodians of the ordinances.

It is the duty and privilege of the organized churches of Christ to keep or observe the ordinances. While there is no definite command which lays the performance of the ordinances upon the churches, yet it appears to be the natural, if not necessary, deduction from the whole trend and tenor of the New Testament teaching. This is a fair inference from the following:

- A. The fact of the establishment of churches as the custodians of Christian truth and customs;
- B. The absence of continuous apostolic authority in the churches;
- C. The principle that definite observances are more properly performed by regularly organized and accredited bodies than by unorganized and unaccredited individuals.

(4) The ordinances themselves.

Among Protestants generally the term ordinance is applied only to Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

A. Baptism.

The ground of the obligation for the observance of the ordinance of Baptism is furnished in the express will of Jesus Christ by His example, practice, and command; and also by the authority of the Apostles, their practice and teaching.

Matt. 3:13-15; John 4:1, 2; Matt. 28:19; Acts 2:41; 8:12, 36, 38; 9:18; 10:46, 48; 16:15, 33; 19:1-5; Rom. 6:1-4; Col. 2:12; I Pet. 3:21.

B. Lord's Supper.

The ground of the obligation for the observance of the Lord's Supper is based upon the example and command of the Lord Jesus together with the practice of the early church and the inspired instruction given through the Apostle Paul.

Matt. 26:26-29; Mark 14:22-25; Luke 22:17-20; I Cor. 11:23-26.

4. The Relationships of the Local Church.

The ministries of the local church were not to be confined to itself, but were to reach out toward others. Its life was not to be self-centered, but expansive and helpful. Each church stood in intimate relations with other churches, and in more general relations with the world around.

We notice then:

(1) The relation of the churches to each other.

It is convenient to view these in their negative and positive aspects.

A. Negatively.

a. There was no subordination of one church to another.

NOTE—If anything is plain in the Scriptures certainly this is. The fifteenth chapter of Acts, which has sometimes been adduced to show that the church at Jerusalem exercised a controlling influence over others, if properly understood, has just the opposite bearing. Some men had gone down from Jerusalem to Antioch and taught that the Gentile Christians, in order to be saved, must become Jews, and keep the whole law by submitting to the rite of circumcision, and be received as proselytes into the Jewish nation. On this question, with marked forbearance to both parties, but without departing one iota from the gospel principle of faith in Christ as essential to salvation, the church at Jerusalem sent a courteous and loving letter by the hand of special messengers to say that in their opinion it was not necessary for Gentiles to become Jews first in order to become Christians, but, in order to refrain from wounding the sensibilities of the Jewish brethren, it was right that Gentile converts should avoid certain offensive practices. Here, there is no hint of lordship on the part of the Jerusalem church over the church at Antioch, neither does there appear anywhere else in the New Testament any trace whatever of superiority, or lordship of one church, or set of churches over another.

b. There was no subjection of the churches to any common human authority.

Consult the following passages: I Cor. 7:6; 10; 17, 25; 9:1-15; 14:37; 16:1; I Thes. 2:3-12; 4:2; II Thes. 3:6, 10, 12; II Pet. 3:2; III John 9.

NOTE—The position of the apostles was peculiar, and even if we grant to them the fullest measure of authority over the churches, there is no evidence that any successors were appointed, or intended to be appointed after them. There is also no hint of any council or college, nor of any general organization or body, either hierarchical or representative, which held authority over individual churches. Of course, all the churches were under the supreme headship of Christ and under the superintendence delegated by Him to the Apostles, but this authority was moral and advisory rather than controlling or mandatory, and was exercised with marked moderation.

c. There was no territorial union of the churches.

NOTE—We read of the churches of Judea (Gal. 1:22), of Galatia (Gal. 1:2; I Cor. 16:1), of Macedonia (II Cor. 8:1), and of the seven churches of Asia Minor (Rev. 1:4, etc.). But the mention of these churches is not made in any way to suggest anything like a territorial or national organization including them as constituents.

B. Positively.

There were positive relations of the churches to each other involving noteworthy points of contact and co-operation. It appears from the preceding discussion that the mutual relation of the apostolic churches was that of independence and equality, and this view is confirmed by the general tenor of Scripture teaching, and by the way in which the churches are mentioned. Yet there was a certain union and interdependence of these local bodies. It was not organic nor governmental, but was rather that of a community of life and interests.

a. There was a common faith.

Eph. 4:5; Titus 1:4; II Pet. 1:2; Jude 3. See also I Cor. 11:2, 23; Rom. 6:17; Acts 2:42; I Tim. 1:13.

b. There was a community of life.

By this we mean a similarity of organization, of public worship including ordinances, of character, of customs. See I Cor. 7:17; 11:16.

c. There was a common relation to the apostles and other teachers.

Acts 18:24-28; 19:1; I Cor. 1:12; 16:12; Rom. 16:3. The churches had a common possession, so to speak, in those whom the Lord had placed over them for their guidance and instruction.

d. There were certain common interests.

NOTE—For example, the churches of Galatia had an epistle addressed to them in common because they were exposed to the same danger. Then the churches of Colosse, Hierapolis, and Laodicea are mentioned together in the epistle to the Colossians as being exposed to danger from heresy, a sort of incipient Gnosticism that was beginning to show itself. In II Cor. 1:1, the churches of Achaia and Corinth are mentioned together, and so with the seven of Asia Minor, addressed in the first two chapters of Revelation.

e. There was a common work.

NOTE—There was a common work in at least one notable instance in which several separate churches took part, and it is not unlikely that there were other similar cases. Rom. 15:26; II Cor. 8 and 9; Gal. 2:10. See also in this connection Rom. 16:1; and III John 8.

(2) The relation of the churches to society.

A. To civil government.

This was purely negative as far as any organic connection was concerned.

NOTE—Our Lord taught (Matt. 22:15-22) that a citizen should perform his duties of citizenship without conflict with those which he owed to God. Paul acknowledged his earthly citizenship (Acts 21:39), and with Peter taught submission to the civil authorities as a Christian duty (Rom. 13:1; I Pet. 2:13). It is needless to say that such submission was to be qualified by the higher obedience to God as limited to the duties of citizenship.

B. To mankind in general.

The church in its life and activity was not to withdraw from the world, but to be an illuminating and preservative agency within the world; John 17:14-16; Phil. 2:15; Matt. 5:14-16; 5:13. All the relations of life were to feel the influence of the church's holy ministry. See also I Cor. 7:29-31; Eph. 5:22-6:9.

C. To the world as sinful and condemned.

Active work for the salvation of men was the high and holy mission of the New Testament church. This, we infer, was to be done by both individual effort on the part of the members, and more generally also, by the united and co-operative efforts of the members in sending the gospel abroad.

Acts 13:1-3; 14:26, 27; Phil. 4:10-18; III John 5-10; Mark 16:15, and others.

STUDY QUESTIONS ON ECCLESIOLOGY

1. Define Ecclesiology.
2. How is the importance of the Church shown?
3. Give the meaning of the English word "Church" as determined by its etymology; also the manner by which it became invested with such meaning.
4. Give the various meanings of the English word "Church" as determined by its past and present usage.
5. Give the meaning of the Greek word "ecclesia" as determined by its etymology.
6. Give the meaning of the Greek word "ecclesia" according to its past and present usage, and discuss its use in the New Testament where "Church" is not the meaning intended.
7. Discuss the significance, origin, and meaning of the phrase "Kingdom of Heaven."
8. What are the three aspects of the Kingdom of Heaven?
9. Give in detail the series of contrasts between the Church in its general meaning and the Kingdom of Heaven.
10. Define the Kingdom of God.
11. Distinguish between the Kingdom of Heaven and the Kingdom of God.
12. Give the meaning of the Kingdom of God as a generic term, and show why it is not synonymous with the Kingdom of Heaven.
13. Give the contrasts between the Church and the Kingdom of God.
14. What is the two-fold use of the word "Christendom?"
15. Give a positive definition of the word "Church" in its general aspect.
16. Discuss the membership of the Church considered as an organism.
17. Define the unity of the Church, and quote one passage in its support.
18. Discuss the revelation of the Church.
19. Discuss the symbolism of the Church under the following heads: A New Man, the Body of Christ, the Temple of God, the Bride of Christ.
20. What is to be said concerning the Church as the Bride of Christ with reference to the present and the future?
21. Discuss the formation of the Church.

22. Give definition of the "local church" and state in what sense it is thus defined.
23. Discuss the use of the terms "local church" and "universal church" and the meanings suggested by them.
24. Give the supposed method by which the formation of the local church was effected, and show how it is inferred that they were organized bodies.
25. Discuss the membership of a local church, and show the required qualifications, quoting one passage with each.
26. Name the officers which were general in the early New Testament churches.
27. What were the qualifications for the office of an apostle?
28. How is it shown that the apostolic office was not designed to be permanent?
29. Quote one passage alluding to the New Testament prophet, and discuss the three-fold summary of this office.
30. Quote one passage referring to the office of evangelist and make brief statement concerning it.
31. What does a study of the passages referring to teachers reveal?
32. Discuss the officers of the New Testament churches whose functions are doubtful.
33. Discuss under each title the officer spoken of as elder, bishop and pastor, and describe the duties of this office.
34. Discuss the office of deacon and its probable origin.
35. Discuss that which is involved in the regulation of its own members by the local church under the following heads: their reception, their discipline, their edification.
36. Describe the following functions of the local church: the election of its officers, servants, and messengers; the maintenance of worship and the ordinances; the management of its own affairs.
37. Give the definition of the term "ordinances of the church."
38. Give the purpose of the ordinances including the three-fold statement concerning them.
39. Show who are the custodians of the ordinances, giving the three-fold argument leading to this conclusion.
40. Discuss the ordinances themselves showing the ground of obligation for their observance.
41. Discuss the relationship of the local churches to each other under the following heads: negatively: no subordination of one church to another; no subjection of the churches to any common human authority; no territorial union of the churches; positively: a common faith; community of life; common relation to the apostles; common interests; common work.
42. Discuss the relations of the church to society as follows: to civil government, to mankind in general, to the world as sinful and condemned.

CHAPTER NINE

ANGELOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF ANGELS (Including Demons and Satan)

A. ANGELS.

B. DEMONS.

C. SATAN.

In this section, the three kindred topics of Angels (proper), Demons, and Satan will be given consideration.

A. Angels (proper).

So much is said in the Scriptures of good and evil angels, and such important functions are ascribed to them, both in the providence of God over the world, and especially in the experience of His people and of His Church, that the doctrine of the Bible concerning them should not be overlooked. That there are intelligent creatures higher than man, has been a general belief. It is so in harmony with the analogy of nature as to be in the highest degree probable, apart from any direct revelation on the subject. In all departments of nature there is a regular gradation from the lower to the higher forms of life; from the almost invisible vegetable fungus in plants to the cedar of Lebanon; from the minutest animalcule to the gigantic mammoth. In man, we meet with the first, and to all appearances the lowest, of rational creatures. That he should be the only creature of his order is as improbable as that insects should be the only class of irrational animals. There is every reason to presume that the scale of beings among rational creatures is as extensive as that in the animal world. The modern philosophy which deifies man leaves no room for any order of beings above him. But if the distance between God and man be infinite, all analogy would prove that the orders of rational creatures between us and God must be numerous. As this is in itself probable, it is clearly revealed in the Bible to be true. The probability is turned to certainty by the express declarations of Scripture. The doctrine is interwoven with the later as well as with the earlier books of revelation.

I The Fact of the Existence of Angels.

This is well established as shown by the teaching of the Old Testament which is unquestionable and clear: Psa. 68:17; 104:4; Dan. 8:15-17.

It is also substantiated by the New Testament teaching: Matt. 18:10; Mark 13:32; 8:38; Matt. 13:41; 26:53; Eph. 1:21; Col. 1:16; John 1:51.

NOTE—The scholastic subtleties which encumbered this doctrine in the Middle Ages, and the exaggerated representations made in connection with it, which then prevailed, have led, by a natural reaction, to an undue depreciation of it in more recent times. For instance, the scholastics debated such questions as, "How many angels could stand at once on the point of a needle?" (relation of angels to space), "Can an angel be in two places at the same time?" (relation of angels to time).

II The Nature of Angels.

1. They are Created Beings: Psa. 148:2-5; Col. 1:16; I Peter 3:22.

Angels are not eternal, as God is, nor self-existent, but created and dependent creatures.

2. They are Incorporeal, Spirit Beings.

Angels in their ordinary form or mode of being are spirits without flesh and blood: Heb. 1:13, 14; Eph. 6:12, R. V.

NOTE—The term, "spirit," may be regarded in general contrast with "matter." The two substances embrace all the objects to be found in the wide realm of knowledge. There is no substance of which it can be said that it is neither matter nor spirit. The world of matter is all around us. We see it in the earth and its productions, in the sea and its treasure, in the sun and the planets revolving around it. Our senses bring us into contact with the universe of material nature, and we hear, and see, and smell, and touch, and taste. It is manifest, too, that matter is capable of great changes. It may be fashioned into many forms, and taken through many processes of refinement. Gold may be purified seven times—that is, purified to perfection—till every particle of dross is taken from it; and the diamond may, by laborious and persevering effort, be fitted to sparkle in a monarch's crown; but no operation performed on matter, can endow with thought, and will, and reflection. These are peculiarities of mind and spirit, and where they are found there is spirit. They are found in angels, and angels are spirits. They are in perfect contrast with matter, whether in its grosser or more refined form. They are spirit beings, and we, burdened with the encumbrances of matter, can very imperfectly imagine what they are. While we regard spirit in general contrast with matter, we may consider it in particular contrast with body. The words of Jesus authorize us to do this: "Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have": Luke 24:39.

3. They are Unmarriageable Beings.

The unfallen angels in heaven neither marry nor are given in marriage. This does not teach that angels are sexless beings, but simply that marriage is not God's program for this heavenly order of beings: Matt. 22:30.

4. They are Personal—that is, Intelligent and Voluntary—Agents.

Personal characteristics are ascribed to angels; they are intelligent, voluntary, active, and, therefore, personal agents: II Sam. 14:20; Rev. 22:8, 9; II Tim. 2:26; Rev. 12:12.

5. They are Immortal Beings.

Angels are possessed of immortality, i. e., they do not die. They have no material bodies, therefore know nothing of growth, decrepitude, or death. The immortality of angels and men is derived from God, and dependent on His will. Angels are immortal because God has made them so. They will never die nor cease to be, because it is not the divine will that they return to their original nothingness, or cease to live their spirit-life: Luke 20:35, 36.

NOTE—It is clear that the equality especially referred to in this passage is the impossibility of dying: "neither can they die any more." For this reason they are equal to the angels, and, like the angels, incapable of death. It is a pleasing thought that angelic spirits will live forever. They are engaged in the work and worship of God, and He deserves everlasting service and worship. They are students of the wonders of redemption (I Peter 1:12), and these wonders invite endless exploration. Angelic research will doubtless be prosecuted forever.

6. They are Beings of Superhuman Intelligence.

Angels are an order of intelligences distinct from man, and apparently superior to man in his present state: II Sam. 14:17, 20; Matt. 24:36.

NOTE—In these passages it is assumed that an angel of God is wise and endowed with superior knowledge. They were, no doubt, created intelligent spirits, their knowledge beginning with their existence. But we may safely conclude that it has been increasing ever since. Their opportunities of observation and the many experiences they have had in connection with direct revelations from God must have added to the stock of their original intelligence. They are finite beings, and their knowledge is, therefore, imperfect (1 Peter 1:12), and if imperfect, progressive. The knowledge of God cannot be augmented because He is infinite; the knowledge of angelic spirits is susceptible of increase, because they are finite. We know full well that angels have never been unconcerned spectators of the works and ways of God. When the foundations of the earth were laid, "the sons of God (angels) shouted for joy" (Job 38:7). What centuries of opportunity have they had to learn about divine things! They have learned much from the history of God's earthly people, they have scanned the pages of prophecy, and when in fulfillment of prophecy the Saviour was born in Bethlehem of Judea, while one of their number announced the fact to astonished shepherds, a multitude of the heavenly host shouted, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." From the birth of Christ until now, angels have watched and cherished the interest of His kingdom, learning more and more concerning the achievements of redemption, and looking forward with devout anticipation to the day when the earth shall be filled with truth, righteousness and salvation. True, the angels possess great knowledge.

7. They are Swift and Powerful Beings.

They are possessed of superhuman power, yet it has its fixed limits; they are mighty but not almighty: Psalms 103:20; II Peter 2:11; Matthew 28:2; Revelation 20:1-3; II Thessalonians 1:7, R. V. Their power is delegated; they are the angels of His might, the ministers through whom God's power is manifested.

NOTE—To give us some faint idea of the rapidity of their movements, the sacred writers represent the angels as flying on their errands to execute the commands of the Almighty. This form of expression, judged alone by the passages of Scripture containing it, may, or may not, be understood literally. This is to be determined by the general teaching of Scripture on this subject. Wings, and flight by means of wings, pertain to material beings, and we have seen that angels are pure spirits—celestial beings as contrasted with terrestrial beings—and as such may be possessed of celestial bodies which are capable of materialization. Of all creatures coming within the range of our vision, those which have wings and fly exemplify the highest speed. Angelic activity, is, therefore, very impressively taught by the language referred to. There must, however, be a basis and a reason for the use of this language, and they are to be found in the velocity of angelic movement, which must be inexpressively rapid. Jesus, on the night of His agony and arrest, said, "Thinkest thou that I cannot pray unto my Father, and He shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" Matthew 26:53. The thought to be emphasized in the passage is that so many angels, their supposed residence being in heaven, could instantly appear in defense of their Lord. How these legions of angels could pass with more than telegraphic rapidity from heaven to sad Gethsemane, we know not. We only know that the possibility of the thing indicates an activity and swiftness truly wonderful. See also in this connection Daniel 9:21.

8. They are Glorious Beings.

Angels are beings of superhuman dignity and heavenly glory: Luke 9:26.

9. They are of Various Ranks and Orders.

Angels, though finite in number, seem to be beyond computation, and are organized in various ranks with correspondingly different authorities.

(1) They are a great multitude: Deuteronomy 33:2, R. V.; Daniel 7:10; Revelation 5:11.

(2) They constitute a company as distinguished from a race: Matthew 22:30; Luke 20:36.

NOTE—We are called “sons of men,” but angels are never called “sons of angels.” They are not developed from one original stock, and no such common nature binds them together as binds together the race of man. They have no common character and history. Each was created separately, and each apostate angel fell by himself. Humanity fell all at once in its first father. Cut down a tree and you cut down its branches. But angels were so many separate trees. Some lapsed into sin, but some remained holy. This may be one reason why salvation was provided for fallen man, but not for fallen angels. The angels are “sons of God,” as having no earthly parentage and no parentage at all except the divine.

(3) They are of various gradations and endowments: I Thes. 4:16; Jude 9; I Pet. 3:22; Col. 1:16.

NOTE—Michael (who is like God) is the only one expressly called an archangel in Scripture, although Gabriel (God’s hero) has been called an archangel by Milton.

(4) They have an organization: I Kings 22:19; Matt. 25:41; 26:53; Eph. 2:2; Rev. 2:13; 16:10; Deut. 4:19; 17:3; Gen. 32:2.

III Moral Character of Angels.

1. They Were All Created Holy.

By the character of God which is absolutely holy, by the character of His creative works with which He as a Holy Being was well pleased, and by the record of the angels’ fall, the fact is fully established that they were created holy: Gen. 18:25; 1:31 cf. Hab. 1:13; II Pet. 2:4; Jude 6.

2. They Had a Probation.

Inasmuch as some are spoken of as “the elect angels” (I Tim. 5:21) and as election is “unto obedience” (I Pet. 1:1, 2), it would seem to be intimated that there was a period of probation or testing, as a result of which the elect were manifested as such. The fact of their probation is clearly established by the record of the obedience of some and the failure and sin of others.

3. Some Preserved Their Integrity.

A large number of the angels have maintained their allegiance to God and obedience to His will, thereby preserving holiness of nature, and perfecting holiness of character: Psa. 89:7, R. V.; Mark 8:38; Matt. 25:31.

4. Some Fell from Their State of Innocence.

There are certain angels who sinned, who left their own habitation, and became identified with the devil and are now known as his Angels; Jude 6; II Pet. 2:4; Rev. 12:7; Matt. 25:41.

5. The Good Are Confirmed in Goodness.

The angels who have maintained their personal integrity and loyalty to God are confirmed in holiness; their obedience has become habitual and their goodness a permanent quality of character: Matt. 25:41; 6:10; 18:10. See also II Cor. 11:14.

6. The Evil Are Confirmed in Wickedness.

The angels who sinned and fell, through their continued choice of evil, have become confirmed in wickedness, and are identified with all the most flagrant forms of sin and rebellion against God: Matt. 13:19; 6:13; John 8:34; I John 5:18; Rev. 12:7, 9; 22:11, R. V.

NOTE—Clarence Larkin, in "The Spirit World," asks the question, "Who are the angels referred to by Peter and Jude?" (II Peter 2:4, 5; Jude 6, 7). He then proceeds to answer the question substantially as follows: "They are not Satan's angels, for his angels are free and, like him, roam about, but these angels are in 'prison,' 'in darkness,' and 'reserved in chains' for judgment. The place of their confinement is not Hell but Tartarus. What was their sin? It was 'fornication,' and fornication of an abominable character. The unlawful co-habitation of angelic beings with 'strange flesh,' that is, with beings of a different nature. When was this sin committed? The text says in the 'Days of Noah,' and that it was the cause of the flood. For the details we must go back to the time before the flood. In Gen. 6:1-4, we read, And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the 'sons of God' saw the 'daughters of men' that they were fair (beautiful); and they took them wives of all which they chose . . . There were 'giants' in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the 'sons of God' came in unto the 'daughters of men,' and they bare children to them, the same became 'mighty men' which were of old, men of renown.

"Who were these 'sons of God'? Some claim that they were the sons of 'Seth,' and that the 'daughters of men' were the daughters of 'Cain,' and that what is meant is that the sons of the supposed godly line of Seth, intermarried with the godless daughters of Cain, the result being a godless race. That the 'sons of God' were the descendants of Seth is based on the assumption that the descendants of Seth lived apart from the descendants of Cain up to a time shortly before the flood, and that they were a pure and holy race, while the descendants of Cain were ungodly, and their women irreligious and carnal minded, and possessed of physical attractions that were foreign to the women of the tribe of Seth. Such an assumption has no foundation in Scripture. To be sure it says in Gen. 4:26, that after the birth of Enos, a son of Seth, that men began to call upon the Lord, but it does not follow that those men were limited to the descendants of Seth, nor that all the descendants of Seth from that time were righteous. As in the early days of the race, it was necessary that brothers and sisters and near relatives should marry, it was very unlikely that the descendants of Seth and Cain did not intermarry until some time before the flood, and stranger still that when they did marry their offspring would be a race of 'giants' or 'mighty men.' It is worthy of note that nothing is said of giantesses, or 'mighty women,' which would have been the case if it were simply a union of the sons of Seth and the daughters of Cain. As both, the descendants of Seth (except eight persons) and of Cain were destroyed in the flood, it is evident that they were not separate tribes at that time and were equally sinners in the sight of God. If the sons of Seth and the daughters of Cain were meant, why did not Moses, who wrote the Pentateuch, say so? It is not sufficient to say that the men of Moses' time knew what he meant. The Scriptures are supposed to mean what they say. When men, we are told, began to multiply on the face of the earth and daughters were born unto them, the 'sons of God' saw the 'daughters of men.' The use of the word men signifies the whole Adamic race, and not simply the descendants of Cain, thus distinguishing the 'sons of God' from the descendants of Adam. There is no suggestion of contrast if the 'sons of God' were also men.

"Four names are used in Gen. 6:1-4: 'Elohim,' rendered 'sons of God'; 'Elohim-Ha-Adam,' 'daughters of men'; 'Hans-Nephilim,' 'giants'; 'Hog-Gibborim,' 'Mighty men.' The title 'Elohim-Ha-Adam,' 'sons of God,' has not the same meaning in the Old Testament that it has in the New. In the New Testament, it applies to those who have become the 'sons of God' by the new birth: John 1:12; Rom. 8:14-16; Gal. 4:6; I John 3:1-2. In the Old Testament, it applies exclusively to the angels, and is so used five times: twice in Genesis (Gen. 6:2-4) and three times in Job, where Satan, an angelic being, is classed with the 'sons of God'; Job 1:6; 2:1; 38:7. A 'son of God' denotes a being brought into existence by a creative act of God. Such were the angels, and such was Adam, and he is so called in Luke 3:38. Adam's natural descendants are not the special creation of God. Adam was created in the 'likeness of God' (Gen. 5:1), but his descendants were born in his likeness, for we read in Gen. 5:3, that Adam 'begat a son in his own likeness, after his image.' Therefore, all men born of Adam and his descendants by natural generation are the 'sons of men,' and it is only by being 'born again' (John 3:3-7), which is a 'new creation,' that they become the 'sons of God' in the New Testament sense.

"The objection to the 'Angelic Interpretation' is based on the words of Jesus as to the marriage relation of the redeemed in Heaven, when He said—'They neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in Heaven': Matt. 22:30; Mark 12:25; Luke 20:35, 36.

"The legitimate conclusion from this statement is, that the angels do not marry, but it does not, therefore, follow that they are sexless. It says they do not marry in Heaven, not that they do not have the power of procreation, but that it is not the nature of 'holy angels' to seek such a relationship. But it does not follow that if they have the power they will not exercise it in a fallen state. What these passages teach is that angels do not multiply by procreation. Angels, as far as we know, were created, not begotten, and as they are immortal, and never die, there is no necessity for marriage among them. Marriage is a human institution to prevent the extinction of the race by death. If the bodies of the dead are to be resurrected, as the Scriptures clearly teach, the inference is that those bodies will be male and female. To teach otherwise is to declare that such a relationship as husband and wife and sister and brother will be unknown in heaven. As the bodies of the righteous dead, after they have been resurrected and glorified, are immortal and shall never die again, there will be no necessity for the righteous in heaven to marry, and, therefore, the marriage relation will be discontinued, but it does not follow that husbands and wives will not know each other 'as such' in the other world.

"Angels and human beings are members of the great family of God, and this kinship between them implies a relationship that under certain conditions might result in a fruitful marriage union. Angels are 'spirit beings' clothed in celestial bodies. These bodies are not ethereal in the sense that they are mere 'ether,' for they have a materialistic form and can fly (Dan. 9:21; Rev. 14:6, 7) and assume the form of a man, and could eat of Abraham's calf (Gen. 18:1-8) and of Lot's unleavened bread (Gen. 19:1-3). Man is also a 'spirit being' clothed in a material body of flesh, and hereafter, as a redeemed man, is to have a 'spirit body' like unto the angels. 'As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly' (1 Cor. 15:49). Are men and angels then so dissimilar that under certain conditions there could not be a union between them?

"It would be interesting to know what would have been the relation between the Adamic and Angelic races if Adam had not fallen. Is not the difference between them, caused by the fall, more of a spiritual than a physical one, and, if so, where does the impossibility of co-habitation come in? What effect the fall had upon the physical state of Adam and Eve is an interesting question. We are told that as a result of the fall their eyes were opened, and they knew that they were naked (Gen. 3:7). Why did they not know that before? Is it true, as some have supposed, that before the fall a sort of 'halo' acted as a veil to hide their nakedness, and by the fall they lost this? While the first pair were told to be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth (Gen. 1:28), showing that it had been inhabited before, the inference is that that union would have been of the most pure and chaste character, but the fall so charged the human heart as to cause man to fall below the brute creation in yielding to lust, and if this be true of fallen man, why not true of 'fallen angels'? As the fall of man did not sever completely the communication of angelic beings with the race, we see no reason why fallen angelic beings could not be attracted by the beauty and comeliness of the females of a race, inferior, but not so far removed from them, and desire to have intimate companionship with them. As Christ was born of a virgin by the Holy Spirit without the instrumentality of a human father, so it would appear, according to Gen. 3:15, that Antichrist, in imitation of the birth of Christ, is to be born of a woman (not necessarily a virgin) with Satan as his father. If Satan then has the power of procreation, why not his and other fallen angels?

"When Moses sent the twelve spies into Canaan (Num. 13:1-33), they reported on their return—and there we saw the giants (Nephilim), the sons of Anak, which come of the giants (Nephilim); and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so were we in their sight." Where did these giants, called 'Nephilim,' the same as the giants of Gen. 6:1-4, come from? They did not come from the other side of the flood, unless there was such blood in Noah and his sons and their wives, which we must believe that God prevented, for the purpose of the flood was to destroy such contamination of the race. Does it not look as if even after the flood there were some sporadic cases of angelic co-habitation with the daughters of men, and was not this the reason why God called for the extermination of the Canaanites that He might blot out the descendants of the Nephilim? This interpretation is confirmed by the words of Gen. 6:4—"There were giants (Nephilim) in the earth in those days (the days before the flood), and also after that." That is, after the flood. The statement that the sin of the 'fallen angels' was that they left their 'first estate,' the 'kingdom of the air,' to descend to the earth for the purpose of going after 'strange flesh,' ought to forever settle the character of that sin to every one who believes the Word of God."

IV The Ministry of Angels.

1. Of Good Angels.

- (1) They stand in the presence of God and worship Him. Angels are called an assembly or congregation, as the church above, which like the church below worships and praises God: Matt. 18:10; Psa. 29:1, 2; Psa. 89:7, R. V.; Heb. 12:22.
- (2) They rejoice in God's works: Job. 38:4, 7; Luke 15:10.
- (3) They execute God's will: Psa. 103:20.
- (4) They guide the affairs of nations: Dan. 10:10-14, 20-21.
- (5) They guide and guard the individual believer: Acts 8:26, 29; 10:13; Heb. 1:14; Psa. 91:11; Dan. 6:22.
- (6) They minister to God's people and defend and deliver God's servants: I Kings 19:5-8; Matt. 4:11; Luke 22:43; Heb. 1:14; Dan. 6:22; Acts 5:19, 20; II Kings 6:17; Gen. 19:11; Acts 12:7-11; Acts 27:23, 24.
- (7) They guard the elect dead: Luke 16:22; 24:22-24; Matt. 28:2-5; John 20:11, 12; Jude 9.
- (8) They will accompany Christ at His second advent: Matt. 25:31; 13:49; 25:31, 32; II Thes. 1:7, 8.

NOTE—God's entrance upon new epochs in the unfolding of His plans seems to have been generally marked by angelic appearances. Hence, we read of angels at the completion of creation (Job 38:7); at the giving of the law (Gal. 3:19); at the birth of Christ (Luke 2:13); at the two temptations in the wilderness and in Gethsemane (Matt. 4:11; Luke 22:43); at the resurrection (Matt. 28:2); at the ascension (Acts 1:10); at the judgment of the living nations (Matt. 25:31).

2. Of Evil Angels.

- (1) They oppose God's purposes, and execute Satan's. Evil angels are employed in the execution of Satan's purposes, which are diametrically opposed to those of God, and have to do with the hindrance and harm of the spiritual life and well-being of God's people: Dan. 10:10-14; Zech. 3:1; Matt. 12:26, 27; 25:41.
- (2) They afflict God's people: Luke 13:16; Matt. 17:15, 16, 18; II Cor. 12:7.
- (3) They hinder God's saints and servants: Eph. 6:11, 12; I Thes. 2:18.
- (4) They seek to deceive God's elect: II Cor. 11:13-14. See also Matt. 24:24.

V Practical Values of the Doctrine of Angels

1. Of the Doctrine of Good Angels.

- (1) It gives us a new sense of the greatness of the divine resources and of God's grace in our creation to think of the multitude of unfallen intelligences who executed the divine purposes before man appeared.
- (2) It strengthens our faith in God's providential care to know that spirits of so high rank are deputed to minister to creatures who are environed with temptations and are conscious of sin.
- (3) It teaches us humility, that beings of so much greater knowledge and power than ours should gladly perform those unnoticed services in behalf of those whose only claim upon them is that they are children of the same common God.

- (4) It helps us in the struggle against sin to learn that the messengers of God are near to mark our wrong-doing if we fall and to sustain us if we resist temptation.
- (5) It enlarges our conception of the dignity of our own being and of the boundless possibilities of our future existence to remember these forms of typical innocence and love who praise and serve God unceasingly in heaven.

2. Of the Doctrine of Evil Angels.

- (1) It illustrates the real nature of sin and the depth of the ruin to which it may bring the soul to reflect upon the present immoral condition and eternal wretchedness to which these spirits so highly endowed have brought themselves by their rebellion against God.
- (2) It inspires a salutary fear and hatred of the first subtle approaches of evil from within or from without to remember that these may be the covert advances of a personal and malignant being who seeks to overcome our virtue and to involve us in his own apostasy and destruction.
- (3) It shuts us up to Christ as the only being who is able to deliver us from these enemies of all good.
- (4) It teaches us that our salvation is wholly of grace, since for such multitudes of rebellious spirits no atonement and no renewal were apparently provided—simple justice having its way with no mercy to interpose or save.

B. Demons.

It is evident that the relation of the Scriptures to the doctrine of demons is vital and positive. Actual communication with unseen spirits; their influence on the acts and destinies of individuals and nations, and demon possession, are taught clearly and unmistakably in both the Old and New Testaments. These teachings are not occasional and incidental, but underlie all Biblical history and doctrine. The Bible recognizes not only the material world, but a spiritual world intimately connected with it, and spiritual beings both good and bad, who have access to, and influence for good and ill, the world's inhabitants. The testimony of the Scriptures on this subject, and that which is to be derived from sources outside the Scriptures, are mutually confirmatory. The importance of a careful and unprejudiced consideration of what the Bible teaches on this subject is apparent.

The authorized English Version of the New Testament is less clear in its presentation of the subject of demon-possession than is the original Greek, in consequence of its translating "diabolos" and "daimonion" and "daimon" by the one word "devil." In the revised version the first of these words is translated "devil," and the other two "demon," the important distinction of the original being thus preserved. The word "diabolos" (devil) meaning "slanderer" or "false accuser" is in the New Testament only used in the singular, and appears more than thirty times as a descriptive title of Satan. In its adjective form it is used three times to represent men as accusers or slanderers (I Tim.

3:1; II Tim. 3:3; Tit. 2:3). The words "daimonion" and "daimon" are used very frequently in the New Testament both in the singular and plural, but never interchangeably with "diabolos." Whenever the words "daimonion" or "daimon" occur the margin of the newly revised version gives "demon" as their proper translation or equivalent.

I The Fact of the Existence of Demons.

1. Their Existence Was Recognized by Jesus.

Jesus Christ recognized the existence of demons by speaking of them and to them: Matt. 12:27, 28, R. V.; 8:28-32, R. V. See also Matt. 10:8, R. V. and Mark 16:17, R. V.

NOTE—There are several theoretical interpretations of the attitude of the Scriptures toward the subject of demons, from which we select the following:

- A. The theory is advanced that Jesus, living in a primitive and unscientific age, simply represented, at least so far as regards this subject, the thought and intellectual advancement of that age; and like His contemporaries, accepted and believed in the doctrine of demons and demon possession, though in fact, through ignorance and superstition, they were entirely mistaken. It is evident that this theory is utterly at variance with the claim which our Lord made to a knowledge of the unseen world from which He came, and to the views which have been held by the church in all ages respecting the authenticity and divine origin of the Scriptures.
- B. A second theory has been adopted by not a few who are regarded as most intelligent and orthodox Christians, which is a compromise between theological and scientific orthodoxy, asserts that Jesus was free from the ignorance and superstitions of the age in which He lived, but in accordance with the prevailing ideas of His time, and the ordinary use of language, spoke of cases of demon possession as His contemporaries did. His mission on earth was not to teach science, or to start curious discussions or controversies on indifferent and unimportant subjects. He came to teach spiritual truths, and did so in the language of the people, speaking of phenomena as they did and in terms with which they were familiar. He recognized in men and women, brought to Him as possessed by demons, only different forms of bodily disease, but as the people spoke of these as demon possessions, He also so spoke of them; as they represented the curing of diseases as casting out demons, He so represented it; and when He gave power to His disciples to heal these diseases miraculously, He, accommodating His language to the popular belief, called it the power to cast out demons. This theory is very intelligible and plausible, but as we believe, open to serious and fatal objections.
 - a. It represents Him not as instructing but deceiving His disciples, as encouraging superstition rather than inculcating truth.
 - b. The above objection acquires additional force when we consider its intimate relations with other teachings of Jesus recorded in Scripture.
 - c. This theory, when applied in detail, presents our Lord in a light entirely inconsistent with His character as a divine teacher. It represents Him not only as speaking of diseases as possession by demons, but as personifying diseases, and actually addressing them as demons.
 - d. This theory represents Christ as making use of an unfounded superstition to substantiate His claim of divine authority. When He sent forth His disciples to preach "the Kingdom of heaven is at hand," the power to cast out demons was given them as a divine attestation to His mission. That which the disciples and those to whom they were sent regarded as one of the principal reasons for accepting their testimony, was the fact that "even the demons were subject unto them through Christ's name," which according to this theory was not a fact but a delusion.

2. Their Existence Was Recognized by the Seventy.

The seventy whom Jesus appointed and sent out two by two before His face, had to cope with demons, and returned with the report that they were subject unto them through the name of Christ (Luke 10:17, R. V.).

3. Their Existence Was Recognized by Paul.

The Apostle to the Gentiles recognized the reality of demons in his day and gave warning against them: I Cor. 10:20, 21, R. V.; I Tim. 4:1, R. V. See also Acts 16:14-18, R. V.; James 2:19, R. V.; Rev. 9:20, R. V.

II The Nature and Character of Demons.

1. They Are Personal Intelligences.

Personal characteristics and actions are ascribed to demons which show that they are possessed of personality and also of intelligence: Matt. 8:29, 31; Luke 4:35, 41, R. V.; James 2:19, R. V.

2. They Are Spirit Beings.

Demons are the same as evil and unclean spirits, as we may see by the following passages: "When the even was come they brought unto him many that were possessed with demons; and He cast out the spirits with His word" (Matt. 8:16). Again, in Luke 10:17, 20, we read: "And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the demons are subject unto us through thy name;" to which the Lord responds: "Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you." So in Matthew's account of the lunatic boy, the demon is said to come forth from him (Matt. 17:18); but in Mark's Gospel this same demon is called a foul spirit, and also a deaf and dumb spirit (Mark 9:25). And Lukes gives us a list of "certain women which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities," of whom the first mentioned is Mary, called Magdalene, out of whom went seven demons (Luke 8:2, 3). Demons and evil spirits are, therefore, synonymous terms. See also Mark 5:2, 7-9, 12, 13, 15; Luke 9:28, 38, 39, 42, R. V.

3. They Are Satan's Emissaries.

Demons are subjects in the kingdom of Satan and servants in his house: their mission seems to be to carry on his warfare and to do his work (Matt. 12:22-30, R. V.).

NOTE—Christ implied, in the controversy with the Pharisees recorded in this passage, that Satan is a king; and as such is in authority over a kingdom. This particular discussion was in regard to the fact that Christ had healed one "possessed with a demon, blind and dumb." The Pharisees claimed that the demon had been cast out by Beelzebub, the prince of demons, or the one whom Jesus, later in the narrative, called Satan. By this Scripture it may be seen that the kingdom of Satan is a host of evil spirits.

4. They Are a Multitude in Number.

Demons are so numerous as to make Satan practically ubiquitous, or everywhere present through their representation. They belong to the "powers of darkness," a great martialled host, veterans in the service of Satan: Mark 5:9, R. V.; Luke 8:30, R. V. See also Matt. 12:26, 27, R. V.

5. They Are Degraded and Debased in Character and Moral Principle.

Demons are beings of a low moral order, vile and malignant in character, and vicious in conduct. They are spoken of as unclean or impure (Weymouth—foul): Matt. 10:1, R. V.; 12:43, R. V.; Mark 1:23, 24; Luke 4:33, 36, R. V.; as vicious and malicious: Matt. 8:28, R. V.; Luke 9:39, R. V.

NOTE—There seem to be degrees of wickedness represented by these spirits; for it is stated in Matt. 12:43-45 that the demon, returning to his house, "taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself."

6. They Seem to be Disembodied Spirits.

Demons are an order of spirit beings apparently distinct and separate from angels, and which, from the intimations of certain passages of Scripture, seem to be in a disembodied state, having existed in some previous period and place in bodily form: Matt. 12:43, 44, R. V.; Mark 5:10-14, R. V.

NOTE—Demons must be carefully distinguished from angels, bad as well as good; for angels are not merely disembodied spirits, but—as we may learn from our Lord's declaration that the children of the resurrection shall be equal to the angels—are clothed with spiritual bodies, such as are promised to us (cf. Phil. 3:21 and Luke 24:39) if we "shall be accounted worthy to obtain that age and the resurrection from the dead" (Luke 20:35). This distinction was clearly understood by the Jews: for in the Acts of the Apostles, we read that the Pharisees cried out concerning Paul: "We find no evil in this man; but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him let us not fight against God" (Acts 28:9). And in the preceding verse we are told of their opponents, the Sadducees, that they denied the existence of angels and spirits.

What then is the meaning of the term "demon"? Plato derives it from the Greek adjective formed from a Greek root signifying "knowing," "intelligent." It was used by him of a sort of intermediate and inferior divinity. "The deity," says Plato, "has no intercourse with man; but all the intercourse and conversation between gods and men is carried on by the mediation of demons." And he further explains that "the demon is an interpreter and carrier from men to gods and from gods to men, of the prayers and sacrifices of the one, and of the injunctions and rewards of sacrifices from the other. If we inquire of these classical writers whence these demons came, we shall be told that they are the spirits of men of the golden age acting as tutelary deities—canonized heroes, precisely similar both in their origin and functions to the Romish saints.

Now, if we remember that according to Bible teaching the heathen gods were really evil angels and demons who inspired oracles and received worship, we shall easily understand that the golden age of which the ancient bards so rapturously sang was no reminiscence of Paradise but of the times of that former world when Satan's power was still intact. A change in the heavenly dynasty, the expulsion of Cronos or Saturn, is always mentioned as having brought to a close this age of unmingled joy. Such, then, are the demons of the classical writers. Nor does there appear to be any reason for changing the meaning of the term in the New Testament. For may not these demons be the spirits of those who trod this earth in the flesh before the ruin described in the second verse of Genesis, and who at the time of that great destruction, were disembodied by God, and left still under the power, and ultimately to share the fate of the leader in whose sin they acquiesced? Certainly, one oft recorded fact seems to confirm such a theory: for we read that the demons are continually seeking upon the bodies of men, and endeavoring to use them as their own. And may not this propensity indicate a wearisome lack of ease, a wandering unrest, arising from a sense of incompleteness; a longing to escape the intolerable condition of being unclothed—for which they were not created—so intense that, if they can satisfy its cravings in no other way, they will even go into the filthy bodies of swine. We find no such propensity on the part of Satan and his angels. They, doubtless, still retain their celestial bodies—for otherwise how could they carry on their conflict with the angels of God?—and would be likely to regard with high disdain the gross and unwieldy tabernacles of men.

The question naturally arises, Why, if a pre-Adamite race really existed upon the earth in the flesh, do we not find some indications of it among the fossil remains? It might seem from recent discoveries that some such indications are in evidence. But the absence in the fossiliferous strata of any vestige of pre-Adamite man is no real obstacle to the view we have taken. For we are totally unacquainted with the conditions of life in that pristine world, which may not have been, and indeed probably were not, the same as our own. For Adam was created after, and apparently, in full view of a previous failure. Hence, it may be that death did not touch those primeval men until the final destruction, and that the decaying and dying state of the animal and vegetable kingdoms was a warning ever before their eyes of the wrath that would at length reach their own persons except they repented. It may be that their bodies were resolved into primal elements, leaving the spirit naked, instead of the spirit departing and giving up the body to decay, as with us. It may be that they were smitten with some consuming plague of the Lord which changed their comely forms into indistinguishable masses of corruption similar to that recorded in Zech. 14:12, or reduced them in a moment to ashes on the earth, Ezek. 28:18. It may be that the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up with all that appertained to them, so that they went down alive into the pit, Num. 16:30.

III The Power and Work of Demons.

1. They Have Knowledge and Discernment.

They knew Christ and recognized His supreme authority; they were able to recognize individuals and discriminate between them; they also seem to have knowledge of their future doom: Matt. 8:29, 31, R. V.; Mark 1:23, 24, R. V.; Acts 19:13-15, R. V.; James 2:19, R. V. See also Luke 8:31, R. V.

2. They Enter and Control the Bodies of Human Beings and Beasts.

Demons, when permitted, are capable of exercising influence over individuals, and also of entering into physical bodies and bringing them under their evil control: Mark 5:8, 11-13; Matt. 4:24, R. V.; 8:16, 28, 33, R. V.; Acts 8:6, 7, R. V.; 16:16.

NOTE—The question is often raised whether demon control obtains at the present time. Although the authentic record of such control is largely limited to the Bible times, it is incredible that demon possession has not existed since. In this connection it should be remembered that these beings are not only intelligent themselves but that they are directly governed and ordered by Satan, whose wisdom and cunning are so clearly set forth in the Scriptures. It is reasonable to conclude that they, like their monarch, are adapting the manner of their activity to the enlightenment of the age and locality. It is evident that they are not now less inclined than before to enter and dominate a body. Demon possession in the present time is probably often unsuspected because of the unrecognized fact that demons are capable of inspiring a moral and exemplary life, as well as of appearing as the dominating spirit of a spiritist medium, or through the grosser manifestations that are recorded by missionaries from heathen lands. These demons, too, like their king, will appear as "angels of light" as well as "roaring lions," when by the former impersonation they can more perfectly further the stupendous undertakings of Satan in his warfare against the work of God.

Of the methods of demons in the latter days of the age, the Scriptures bear special testimony. They will cover their lies with the empty form of religion, and by every means make them to appear as the truth, that they may draw both the saved and the unsaved from their hope in Christ: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron" (1 Tim. 4:1, 2). A departure from the true faith is thus predicted to be the evidence of the influence of demons in the last days. This is none other than the great apostasy that must precede the "Day of the Lord" according to II Thes. 2:2, 3.

Demon influence and control in its relation to individuals is exercised in a two-fold method: obsession and possession. The first step on the demon's part to gain control is termed obsession. It is defined as the "state or act of being influenced by an evil spirit"; also the continued or continual recurrence of an illusion or delusion. This influence is exercised by an external spirit, antecedent to possession. This is the initial stage of demon influence. Possession is the result of obsession or attack after entrance is gained by the demon. Possession is the act of occupying, or taking, or holding complete control.

3. They Afflict Men with Infirmities and Maladies, Both Physical and Mental.

They can cause dumbness (Matt. 9:32, 33) and blindness (Matt. 12:22) and insanity (Luke 8:26-35) and suicidal mania (Mark 9:22) and personal injuries (Mark 9:18) and supernatural strength (Luke 9:18) and inflict physical defects and deformities (Luke 13:11-17). Once they have gained control over a human body they can come and go at will (Luke 11:24-26). See also Luke 9:37-42, R. V.; Mark 5:4, 5, R. V.

C. Satan.

Is there such a being as Satan? Multitudes of scholars and intellectual people deny his existence, and that he ever did exist save in the imagination of ancient and illiterate people. By many, Satan is now looked upon as a product of priestcraft, a relic of superstition, a myth of a bygone age. With others, Satan is merely an abstraction, a mere negation, the opposite of good. "All the devil there is, is the devil within you," is the last words of "modern thought." The words which Goethe puts into the mouth of Mephistopheles—"I am the spirit of negation"—is accepted as a good workable definition of the devil. He is regarded as a mere abstract principle of evil. As some one has quaintly put it, "They spell devil without a 'd,' as they spell God with two 'o's.' Good and evil is their scheme."

But the more general conception of Satan, the one that prevails among the masses, may be gathered from the pictorial representations of him that appear on the street posters, in illustrated magazines, and which are displayed upon the stage—where he is pictured as a grotesque monster in human form, having horns, hoofs, and forked tail. Such a conception is an insult to intelligent people, and in consequence, the devil has come to be regarded either as a bogey with which to frighten naughty children, or as a fit subject for jest and joke. Much of this comes from the fact that men have read their fancies and theories into the Scriptures; they have read Milton's "Paradise Lost" but have neglected the book of Job; they have considered the experiences of Luther instead of the Epistles of Peter and Jude. To avoid scepticism on the one hand, and ridicule on the other, we must resort to the Scriptures to formulate our views of this doctrine.

NOTE—The devil has always worked secretly and sought to hide his true identity. It serves his purpose well to keep his dupes in ignorance concerning his real existence. When he beguiled Eve he did so through a serpent. When he appeared before God to accuse Job he waited until a day when the "sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them," (Job 1:6). When he sowed his "tares," he did so secretly, in the night, "while men slept" (Matt. 13:25). When he betrayed Christ into the hands of His enemies, he worked through Judas. Satan is an adept at disguising himself; he comes to us not as a dragon of darkness but "is transformed into an angel of light" (II Cor. 11:14).

I The Fact of Satan.

According to the Scriptures there is a being called "the Devil" and "Satan"—a real being who has a real existence. Concerning this they leave no room for doubt: Job 1:6-12; 2:1-7; Zech. 3:1, 2; Matt. 4:1-11; 13:19; Luke 10:18; John 13:2; Acts 5:8; I Pet. 5:8; Eph. 6:11, 12.

NOTE—In the Old Testament, Satan is referred to in seven books under different names; namely, in Genesis, I Chronicles, Job, Psalms, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Zechariah. In the New Testament, he is referred to by all the writers and will be found mentioned in nineteen books; namely, the four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, the Pauline Epistles: to the Romans, I and II Corinthians, Ephesians, I and II Thessalonians, I and II Timothy, the Epistle to the Hebrews; and in the Epistles of James, John, Peter, and Jude, and, lastly, in the Revelation. Would all these authors, writing during a period of sixteen hundred years, be astray with regard to his existence?

The Lord Jesus Christ Himself refers to Satan at least fifteen times, under five different names, and several of these instances are mentioned by three of the four Evangelists. He was the Truth. Would He have spoken of a being as such if he had no existence? He would never thus have spoken of a mere principle of evil. The Lord was sinless in heart and mind. No evil thought ever could, or did, rise up in His mind; no evil desire could be in His heart; and yet He was tempted of the devil, when He was absolutely alone in the wilderness. If no one approached Him, and He was sinless, how could any suggestion arise within Him of a sinful nature that could be called a temptation? How could any evil principle approach Him from without, or rise up from within? The very thought is absurd and impossible. If He was tempted, He was tempted by some being, and the narrative declares that it was the devil.

II The Personality of Satan.

In the Bible the personality of the devil is made emphatic. He is not only the source of evil in others, but the embodiment of evil in a person.

1. Personal Pronouns Are Used of Satan Which Unmistakably Reveal Personality: Job 1:8 (thou); Job 2:1, 2 (himself, thou); Zech. 3:2 (thee).

2. Personal Characteristics and Elements of Personality Are Clearly Ascribed to Satan.

(1) Intelligence.

His temptations are spoken of as "devices" (II Cor. 2:11) and as "the wiles of the devil" (Eph. 6:11); while in Rev. 2:24, we read of the depths of Satan" (Greek, "deep things"). Further in Rev. 12:9, he is termed "that old serpent, called the devil and Satan which deceiveth the whole world." To deceive implies design, and design is the product of intelligence, and intelligence is inseparable from personality.

(2) Memory.

In his conflict with our Lord in the wilderness, Satan quoted from the Old Testament Scriptures (Matt. 4:6). A mere abstraction could not do this.

(3) Knowledge.

When the devil is cast down to the earth, during the tribulation period, we are told he has "great wrath because he knoweth that he hath but a short time" (Rev. 12:12). But that which is impersonal cannot be said to know.

(4) Will.

Satan possesses a will or the power of choice, which is further proof that he is a personal being: II Tim. 2:26; Isa. 14:12, 13.

(5) Emotions.

Such emotions as desire (Luke 22:31), pride (I Tim. 3:6), and wrath (Rev. 12:12) are attributed to Satan. But desire, pride, and wrath cannot be predicted of the law of gravitation—they are inseparable from personality.

(6) Executive and organizing ability.

In Rev. 12:7 and Rev. 20:7, 8, we find Satan marshalling his legions to engage in warfare, and in Eph. 6:12, we have the intimation that he is at the head of graded and organized forces.

3. Personal Actions Are Attributed to Him.

(1) He speaks.

He is represented as talking with God (Job 1:9, 10) and arguing with our Lord (Matt. 4:1-11).

Speech is the normal possession of personalities only.

(2) He tempts.

The first time this mysterious being is introduced to us in the Word of God he appears in this capacity, inciting our first parents to disobedience. In Matt. 4:3, he is expressly termed "the tempter." And again, in I Cor. 7:5 and I Thes. 3:5, the saints are warned against his machinations. To tempt implies design and design argues intelligence and moral qualities, and these are inseparable from personality.

(3) He accuses.

To accuse unquestionably argues a conscious and rational entity: Rev. 12:10; Job 1:9-11.

(4) He makes war: Rev. 12:7; 20:8, 9.

(5) He performs miracles: Ex. 7:11; II Thes. 2:9.

(6) He is capable of receiving punishment.

A mere abstraction cannot be punished. That which is nothing more than a negation cannot be tormented. That which is incorporeal and intangible cannot be cast into the lake of fire. The fact that the Scriptures declare that Satan shall be punished is conclusive evidence that he is a person, and a person endowed with moral responsibility.

III The Original State of Satan.

It is obvious from the teaching of various passages of Scripture that Satan was not always the fallen depraved creature he is represented as being since his first appearance to man in the Garden of Eden. This teaching is not so direct as that on other subjects with which Scriptures deal, but sufficient is given upon the origin and character of Satan to show that his first estate was not one of degradation but one of exaltation and perfection.

1. The Origin of Satan.

It is evident from the holy and righteous character of God that He could not have created anything that was essentially and originally evil. Man today is a sinful creature, but he has not always been such (Ec. 7:29). Originally, man was created in the image and likeness of God, but by an act of wilful disobedience he corrupted his nature and became sinful. The same is true of that part of the angels that apostatised. They were not created in a fallen condition. Peter tells us that the angels "sinned" (II Pet. 2:4), and Jude declares that these angels "kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation" (Jude 6). From these two examples furnished by sinful man and the fallen angels we might reasonably conclude, from the law of analogy, that the same principle would hold good concerning Satan. It is unthinkable for us to suppose that God would create the devil, though we must believe He created the one who subsequently became the devil. But we are not left to the uncertain speculations of reason, the Word of God itself gives us definite information which establishes this fact: Col. 1:16; John 1:1-3; Eph. 3:9; Rev. 4:11; Ezek. 28:13, 15.

NOTE—One of the few passages which seem to throw light upon the origin of Satan and of his position and condition before his apostasy is to be found in Ezek. 28:11-19. A careful reading of these verses produces the conviction that the prophet is here referring to some other than an earthly king or a mere human being. He must have been borne by the spirit of prophecy into some other time and place, and to some other person. Ezekiel must have been taken back to a far distant period of time. While the king of Tyrus was a historical person, we are compelled to conclude that he must also have been a typical character—a figure of Satan himself. Such terms as here found could never have been employed to describe any mere human king, or any mere human being whatsoever. Granting that these verses refer to Satan let us note the description. In verse 13, he is spoken of as being in the garden of God. Satan was indeed in Adam's garden; he did not, however, appear there as a minister of God, but as an apostate and malignant spirit eager for the ruin of the new creation. Hence, the Eden of this passage must have been of a far earlier date. Nor did it at all resemble the garden in which Adam was placed, for we read nothing of trees pleasant to the sight and good for food; but the prominent feature is the covering, that is, probably, the pavilion or palace of Satan, which is described as being made of gold and of every precious stone. Yet, while this description does not in any way remind us of the Adamic Eden, we cannot but be impressed by its resemblance to that of the New Jerusalem, with its buildings of pure gold as it were transparent glass, its foundations garnished with all manner of precious stones, its jasper wall, and its gates of pearl. And that city, be it remembered, seems to be the destined habitation of the Church, composed of those who will then be spiritual beings of a higher order equal to the angels, and, with Christ at their head, will have succeeded to that same power which Satan and his angels are now so fearfully abusing: (Luke 20:36; Rev. 5:10). The latter part of verse 13 should be translated "the service of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared with thee on the day when thou wast created." Music is one of the necessary attendants of royal state. In the third chapter of Daniel, we have an enumeration of the various instruments which were to signal the time of the king's pleasure (Dan. 3:5); and in the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah, the pomp of the king of Babylon and the noise of his viols are said to be brought down to the grave with him. The blast of a trumpet accompanied the manifestation of God upon Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:16); and the trump of the archangel will sound at the return in glory of the King of the whole earth. The meaning, then, of this clause seems to be that Satan was from the moment of his creation surrounded by the insignia of royalty; that he awoke to consciousness to find the air filled with the joyful music of those whom God had appointed to stand before him. In the next verse, we seem to pass from the royalty of Satan to his priestly dignity (Ezek. 14:18). He is said to have been, by God's appointment, the Anointed Cherub that covereth. Anointed doubtless means consecrated by the oil of anointing; while the Cherubim appear to be the highest rank of heavenly beings, sitting nearest the throne of God, and leading the worship of the universe (Rev. 4:9, 10; 5:11-14). Possibly they are identical with the thrones of which Paul speaks in Col. 1:16. The words "that covereth" indicate an allusion to the Cherubim that overshadowed the ark; but we cannot, of course, define the precise nature of the office of Satan. The general idea seems to be that he directed and led the worship of his subjects. He is also said to have been upon the holy mountain of God, and to have walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire. The mountain of God is the place of His Presence in visible glory, where His High Priest would, of course, stand before Him to minister. The "stones of fire" may, perhaps, be explained as follows: We know that the station of the Cherubim is just beneath the glory at the footstool of the throne (Ezek. 1:26). When Moses took Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, up the mountain of Sinai to see the God of Israel, "there was under His feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were, the body of heaven in its clearness. . . . And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire upon the top of the mount" (Ex. 24:10, 17). This paved work of sapphire, glowing with devouring fire, is, perhaps, the same as the stones of fire; and if so, Satan's presence in the midst of them would indicate his enjoyment of the full cherubic privilege of nearness to the throne of God. Verse 15 shows that God is not the Author of evil. For even the Prince of Darkness was by creation perfect in all his ways, and so continued until iniquity was found in him and he fell.

2. The Original Perfections of Satan.

He possessed the sum of all creature excellencies. No defect was to be found in him: he was created perfect and remained so until he chose to sin: Ezek. 28:12-17.

- (1) Fulness of wisdom. Verse 12.

He possessed a full measure of creature wisdom.

- (2) Perfection of beauty: Verses 12, 17.

He possessed a full measure of creature beauty.

- (3) Holiness of nature: Verse 14.

He possessed a full measure of creature moral perfection.

- (4) Perfection of conduct: Verse 15.

He maintained a perfection of creature conduct until his fall.

3. The Original Position of Satan.

Satan seems to have been the highest of all of God's created intelligences, and his position and prerogatives seem to have been in accordance with the place given him in God's creative order and as befitting one possessed with his endowments (Ezek. 28:14).

Satan is here described as "the anointed cherub." Scripture furnishes us with a number of examples where "anointing" is connected with induction to an office, and in the verse now before us the evidence is evidently to God's appointment of Satan to fill a certain position. Here we see the exercise of divine sovereignty in the statement, "I have set thee so." Satan came to this position, not by inherent right, or by struggle, but by the gift of his divine Creator and Sovereign. It is a point of deep interest to observe that in Old Testament times men were anointed to fill but three offices—the prophetic, the priestly, and the kingly (I Kings 19:16; Lev. 16:32), and there are some who infer from the hints dropped in Scripture that Satan originally filled each of these offices himself. See the following references: Ezek. 28:13 cf. Ex. 28:17-20; Ezek 28:18; Isa. 14:13 cf. Ezek. 28:17.

4. The Original Domain of Satan (Ezek. 28:13, 14).

The general interpretation of this passage is that Satan was created as a guard or protector to the throne of the Most High. This is reasonable. Like the golden cherubim, covering the visible mercy seat in the Holy of Holies of the earthly tabernacle, he was created a guard and covering cherub to the heavenly center of glory. It is expressly stated that he was located by the Most High upon the holy mountain of God, the mountain of God being a symbol of God's power, government, and eternal throne (Psa. 48:1; 68:15; Isa. 2:2). Over this exalted throne Satan was set as a covering cherub. He is also said to have been in "Eden, the garden of God," which is evidently another Eden than that in which Satan appeared as a serpent. It is probably a reference to the primitive creation, and the whole passage suggests a position of great authority for which he was created and anointed.

IV The Fall of Satan.

God did not create evil. "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit," (Matt. 7:17, 18). If God did not create evil, then how did it originate? It will not do to say—"An enemy hath done this," for then the question will arise, "Who made the enemy?" If Satan did not originate evil in his own heart, then it must have been implanted in his heart from some outside source. This would require the co-existence of good and evil in the universe and rob God of His sovereignty. When God created the angels, and all the glorious beings that He originally created, there was no sin or evil in the universe. But as free moral agents they had the power of choice, not between good and evil, but between following the will of God, or their own will. As long as Satan chose the will of God there was no evil in the universe, but the moment he chose to follow his own will, he fell, and by persuading others to follow him he introduced evil into the universe. The fact that Satan did fall is declared not only in the Old Testament Scriptures, but was explicitly taught by the Lord Jesus Himself: "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven (Luke 10:18).

1. The Cause of the Fall.

(1) Pride.

Several Scriptures shed light upon this. In Ezek. 28:17 we read, "Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness." Here was the first sin that broke up the calm of eternity, and stirred up the storm that has not ceased to rage, with ever increasing violence; and shall, till He quells it forever by His word, "Peace be still." The words, "Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty," suggest that instead of "the anointed cherub" finding his chief delight in the contemplation of the divine excellencies, he became occupied with his own beauty and, as Proverbs 16:18 declares, "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall," so these lofty thoughts which Satan had of himself brought about his ruin. With this agrees I Tim. 3:6, "Lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil."

(2) False ambition.

The root of sin is selfishness, and when Satan said, "I will ascend into heaven (from the original earth over which he was ruling), I will exalt my throne above the stars of God (other ruling powers) . . . I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High (Isa. 14:12-14), then Satan was guilty of treason, and started a rebellion against the government of God that will never cease until he and all his followers are cast into the lake of fire to spend eternity.

2. The Result of the Fall.

(1) The anointed cherub became the original sinner: I John 3:8.

- (2) He became the author, fountain-head, and disseminator of sin: John 8:44.
- (3) He ceased to abide in the truth and sin became his inherent nature, element, environment, and delight: I John 3:8; John 8:44.
- (4) His wisdom became corrupted: Ezek. 28:17. See Rom. 1:21-25.
- (5) He came under condemnation: I Tim. 3:6, R. V.
- (6) He is to be expelled from the heavenlies: Ezek. 28:16, 17; Rev. 12:7-10.
- (7) His future destruction is determined: Isa. 14:12-17; Ezek. 28:16; Rev. 20:1-3, 7-10.

V The Present Abode of Satan.

The common notion is that Satan and his angels are imprisoned in hell. This is not true. The angels described in II Pet. 2:4 and in Jude 6, as having left their "first estate," and being "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness," are not Satan's angels. They are probably a special class of angels whose sin caused the flood.

According to the Scriptures, Satan does not seem to be restricted to any one place.

1. He Has Access to Heaven.

In Job (Job 1:6, 7; 2:1, 2), Satan is seen appearing in the midst of other heavenly beings, before the presence of Jehovah; and there seems to be nothing unusual in the presence of Satan in this celestial company. To the question of Jehovah, "Whence cometh thou?" he replies, "From going to and fro in the earth and from walking up and down in it." From this revelation, the important information is given that Satan is free to appear in the presence of God. This is also seen in Rev. 12:7-10 where he is presented as "the accuser of the brethren, who accuseth our brethren before God day and night." See also Zech. 3:1.

2. He Dwells in the Heavenly Realms.

Satan and the principalities, the powers, the world rulers of darkness, the spiritual hosts of wickedness have their abiding place in the heavenlies: Eph. 6:11, 12, R. V.

3. He Is Active upon the Earth.

The earth seems to be the special field of Satan's activity; he goes to and fro in the earth, and walks up and down in it: Job 1:7; I Peter 5:8.

VI The Present Position of Satan.

It seems to be a principle in God's governmental dealings to "bear with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." Apparently, He gave the antediluvian world one hundred and twenty years in which to repent of their wickedness and accept the overtures of His mercy made through Noah. With infinite patience He dealt with Pharaoh, and it was not until after the ten plagues had failed to soften his heart that he was cut off out of the land of the living. It was the same with Israel. His judgments fell upon the chosen people only after long and repeated provocation, and then but mildly at the first. It was not until after fifteen centuries of unbelief and rebellion that they were dispersed throughout the world. Likewise, God did not consign Satan to the lake of fire on the occasion of his first sin, but rather He has permitted him a long spell of freedom in which to demonstrate the inveteracy of his enmity against God, ere he shall be finally cast into that fire "prepared for the devil and his angels."

The present position of Satan which he occupies through this sufferance on the part of God is revealed by the following:

1. It is a Position of Exaltation and Honor.

The position of Satan is so exalted that even Michael, the archangel, would not bring any railing judgment against him: Jude 6, 9, R. V.

2. It is a Position of Rulership and Authority.

(1) He is called the "Prince of the power of the air."

Satan is given the title of the "prince of the power of the air," and is credited with possessing a kingdom, indicating his authority and power in relation to the heavenly realms: Eph. 2:2; Matt. 12:26, 29, R. V. See also Acts 26:18 and Col. 1:13.

(2) He is called the "Prince of this world."

Satan as the prince of this world is the head of the present godless world order and system: John 12:31; 14:30; 16:11.

NOTE—The Greek word translated "world" in John 12:31 is "kosmos," and the thought is of the present world order. And our Lord's teaching is that the devil is the prince of this present world order. How the devil came to be prince of this world it may be impossible for us to say positively, but that he is so admits of no question, if we are to accept the teaching of Jesus Christ. And anyone who will study the ruling principles of commercial life, of political life, of social life, and above all of international relations, to such a one it will become perfectly evident that the devil is the one who is the master of the present perverted order of things. If we ever doubted before that there is a devil, and just such a devil as the Bible pictures, we can scarcely doubt it longer, when we consider the actions of the rulers of the earth in the recent mad World War and the events which have followed it. How could beings so intelligent in matters of science and philosophy and economics as the rulers and advisers of Germany, at the time of the war ever be guilty of plunging the nations of the earth into such a bloody conflict? There is but one reasonable answer. Because there is a devil who rules the present "kosmos" or world order and he controls the Kaisers and the Reichstags and will until the Prince comes whose right it is to reign—The Prince of Peace.

(3) He is called the "god of this age."

By this title he is presented as the self-constituted object of world worship: II Cor. 4:3, 4. See also II Thes. 2:3, 4; Rom. 6:16.

VII The Character of Satan.

Among the four questions which A. H. Strong suggests as being unanswerable is the question: How could a being created pure ever fall? While no satisfactory answer for this query may be found, nevertheless the fact is clearly established by the teaching of Scripture that Satan, although pure at the time of his creation, did fall. This is implied by the statement of Jesus in John 8:44: "He . . . abode not in the truth." The word "abode" suggests that previously he was in the truth. That which is here implied is definitely taught in other parts of Scripture, of which Ezek. 28:15 furnishes us an example. "Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created till iniquity was found in thee." But whatever may have been his character at the first, however exalted his position, there came a time when "his heart was lifted up;" "pride," which "goeth before destruction" entered, and he came under condemnation, was disgraced and fell. The character of Satan is revealed in a two-fold manner:

1. By the Significance of the Names Given to Him in the Scriptures.

(1) Satan.

Fifty-two times he is called "Satan," which means "hater," "enemy," or "adversary." He is the hater of both God and His people, and is the enemy of God and the adversary of man: Job 1:6; 2:1; Zech. 3:1.

NOTE—In the title of Satan we see him in the character role which dominates all his actions. As Satan he is the hater. Of all the evil passions of the soul, hate is the most terrible. As manifested in human relationships, the hater is a murderer. Somehow hate seems to be a resultant of wrath, malice, envy, jealousy, and revenge. Hatred in the bosom of the weak or cowardly affects only its possessor; but with hatred burning in the soul of one who is strong and courageous, nothing belonging to the object of hatred is secure: life, personal property, or reputation.

Note the full significance of hatred; then place beside it the one who hates—yes, as no other being in all the universe can hate. He is the father of haters; the tragedies of all kinds filling the world with terror, because of murders, bomb explosions, incendiaries, poisonings, are but the scattered rays reflected and deflected from this full orb of hate as he revolves in his sphere of darkness.

Satan hates God, hates the Holy Ghost, but the full force of his hate, of necessity, is directed towards the Son of God, his rival for place and power. The supreme work of the Son was atonement; now, the interest and anxiety of heaven has been transferred to this planet. The supreme triumph of the Second Person of the Trinity was accomplished on the cross where He paid the price of human redemption. His energies are now directed to the breaking down of all that was accomplished on the cross. Every movement, every motive, every virtue, coming directly or indirectly from the merits of the atonement, become at once the object of Satanic hatred. Therefore every inch of territory conquered by the Gospel propaganda was and is a victory over his hateful protest.

(2) The Devil.

Thirty-five times he is denominated "the devil," which means the accuser or slanderer—accusing the saints before God and traducing the character of God before men: Rev. 12:7-10; Matt. 4:1.

NOTE—Devil is the English translation of the Hebrew word "sair" and also of the Greek word "diabolus."

The Hebrew word "sair" means "hairy goat," "he goat," etc. The he goat, in the Bible, stands for all that is low and base. Those who partake of the "sair" nature at the judgment of the living nations, are called goats. He divideth the sheep from the goats. God teaches us spiritual lessons in all nature, especially by the animal kingdom, and as the goat is a synonym for the lowest instincts of the animal; we find a being created in the highest realm of spiritual life sinking to the lowest level of brute life. If no further delineation were given—no other name than devil—the fall is seen to be from one extreme to another.

This cognomen carried further has a second meaning: spoiler, one whose touch soils and besmirches, rearranges; bright spots are smeared with black soot; flowers with sweet odor, after his blight passes over them, send out a stench; hearts of purity are defiled and debauched; faces of beauty become marred and ugly. Whenever and wherever it serves his purpose, kosmos becomes chaos. He is a spoiler. The Greek word "diabolus" designates him more as to his ruling and authority than to the elements of his character. We have noticed already the meaning of devil, but from the original word we get more explicit meaning as to his rank of authority. As Lucifer, we do not know his ruling rank, but in his lost estate he ranks as commander-in-chief. Whatever we may say of him, the prefix, "arch," designating his angel rank, can be logically attached: archspoiler—archdeceiver—archaccuser—archslanderer, etc. However, if accurately defined, "diabolus" means calumniator—archcalumniator; a propagator of calumny. Acting in the capacity of calumniator, he seeks out and defames the innocent. He sends out a million rumors daily which would be, if tangible, cases for libel in any court.

(3) The Prince of the Power of the Air.

He is referred to as the Prince of the power of the air, which points to his present abode and sphere of operations: Eph. 2:2 cf. 6:12.

NOTE—This principality, spoken of as the power of the air, would seem to be the same as the heavenly places, which as Paul tells us swarm with the spiritual hosts of wickedness. It is by no means necessary to restrict it to the eighty or a hundred miles of atmosphere supposed to surround the earth: for if Satan's power extends to the sun, and so to the whole of our solar system, the kingdom of the air would include the immense space in which the planets of our center revolve; and in such a case it seems not unlikely that the throne of its prince may be situated in the photosphere of the sun. We should thus find a deep underlying significance in the fact that idolatry has always commenced with, and in no small degree consisted of, the worship of the Sun-god, whether he be called San, Shamas, Bel, Ra, Baal, Moloch, Milcom, Hada, Adrammelech, Mithras, Apollo, Sheik Shems, or by any other of his innumerable names. May there not be great significance in the fact that the very name of Satan passes, through its Chaldaic form "Sheitan," into the Greek "Titan," which last word is used by Greek and Latin poets as a designation of the Sun-god? Indeed, it would almost seem as if this connection were understood in the dark ages: for Didron, in his Christian Iconography, describes three Byzantine miniatures of the tenth century, in which Satan is depicted with a nimbus, or circular glory, the recognized sign of the Sun-god of Pagan times.

(4) The Prince of this World.

Satan manifestly holds the legitimate title of "Prince of this world." This dignity, together with the royal prerogatives which of right pertain to it, was conferred upon him by God Himself. There is no other way of explaining the fact that the Lord Jesus not only spoke of the Adversary by this title, but plainly recognized his delegated authority in that He did not dispute his claim to the present disposal of the kingdoms of the world and their glory. And it is only by recognizing the legitimacy of that claim that we can understand a passage of Jude in which the conduct of the archangel Michael towards Satan is adduced as an example of due respect for authority, even though it be in the hands of the wicked: John 14:30; Ezek. 28:11-19; John 16:11; Jude 9.

NOTE—Christ, by the victory of His cross, has wrested the sceptre of authority and rule from the hand of Satan, gained by him in his conquest in Eden; therefore, with respect to the believer, Satan's power and authority is provisionally nullified. At the close of the present age, he will be deprived of his principedom; and the basis of real power being thus removed, his usurped authority will be terminated.

(5) The God of this Age.

He is called the god of this age because he is the inspirer and director of all spurious religion: II Cor. 4:4 cf. Rom. 6:16. See also II Thes. 2:3, 4.

NOTE—There is, indeed, reason to believe that the devil has received far more directly personal worship than those who are not accustomed to investigate such matters would imagine. But it is to something more general that Paul refers (Rom. 6:16). His own words in another place will best explain his meaning; “Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?” There are two laws set before us, that of God and that of Satan; and whose law we keep, his servants and worshippers we are. Profession, however vehement, goes for nothing in the other world. We may profess the worship of the Supreme God, we may be very sedulous in the outward part of it; but if at the same time we are obeying the law of Satan, his subjects we are reckoned to be, and to him our prayers and praises ascend. And the law of Satan is this: That we seek all our pleasure in and fix all our heartfelt hopes upon this present age over which he presides; and that we use our best endeavors—by means of various sensuous and intellectual occupations and delights, and countless ways of killing time which he has provided—to keep our thoughts from ever wandering into that age to come, which will see him a fettered captive instead of a prince and a god.

(6) Abaddon-Apollyon.

Abaddon-Apollyon means destroyer. The Hebrew and Greek names are linked together because both have exactly the same meaning. This name links him with the bottomless pit: Rev. 9:11.

NOTE—Satan under the name of Abaddon-Apollyon is presented as the destroyer or the destructionist. He has been discussed as a “spoiler,” but one who destroys carries the work farther than the spoiler. As Abaddon or Apollyon, he is the king of the abyss, or “bottomless pit,” and when he appears, it is with purpose and equipment for destruction. Just as God sent the “destroying angel” throughout Egypt, bringing a curse upon Pharaoh for his hardness of heart, this mighty messenger of the abyss visits his destruction wherever and whenever he finds, not the absence of the typical blood upon the door, but when he finds it, or any evidence of allegiance to the One Whose sacrificial blood he seeks to destroy. As Abaddon-Apollyon he assumes the part of Finisher of his task; when we see him a destroyer, we have a full sized photograph—leaving out not a single line of countenance, or a single character or attribute of his composite nature. He may soil, spoil, deceive, traduce, accuse, slander, wound, etc., but the ultimate aim is destruction. “When sin is finished it bringeth forth death.” We see how the two great Rivals stand over against each other in their respective spheres: “for this cause the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil.” With the same degree of purpose the devil seeks to destroy the work of the Son of God. He seeks to destroy truth, righteousness, virtue, hope, faith, love, visions of God, power of the Blood, thoughts of eternity and heaven. Abaddon-Apollyon—archdestroyer.

(7) Other designations of Satan.

He is named “Beelzebub” (Matt. 12:25), which regards him as the head of the demons. He is spoken of as “the wicked one” (Matt. 13:19), which is descriptive of his evil character. He is called “the dragon” (Hebrew—tannoth, howler, jackal; making the noise like the howling jackal in the wilderness), represented as a monstrous animal having the form of a serpent, with crested head, wings, and tremendous claws; ferocious and dangerous—to enforce and emphasize the dangerous character of him who seeks our destruction (Rev. 12:9). In the name Belial, we have suggested the baseness and vileness of his character (II Cor. 6:15). Under the figure of the “Old Serpent” he is seen in his most dangerous capacity.

2. By the Direct Teaching of the Scriptures.

We are not left to the names applied to Satan alone for the source of our knowledge of his character. The Scripture language is clear and positive in its portrayal of this personage.

(1) He is described as cunning and subtle in character.

A. His devices.

The devil has many and subtle devices of which we should not be ignorant: II Cor. 2:11.

B. His wiles.

Satan is a great strategist and uses so many wiles, i. e., makes so many subtle assaults that we need the whole armor of God to withstand him: Eph. 6:11, 12, R. V. See also Eph. 4:14, R. V.

C. His wonder-working power.

Satan displays such power and signs and wonders of falsehood as to utterly deceive all those who receive not the love of the truth: II Thes. 2:9, 10. See also Rev. 13:11-14; Matt. 24:24.

D. His power of self-transformation.

Satan is able to fashion himself into an angel of light: II Cor. 11:14.

(2) He is described as wicked and malignant in nature.

A. He is the evil one.

Satan is the evil one, the impersonation of evil and the source of evil: I John 5:19, R. V.; Matt. 5:37, R. V.; Matt. 6:13, R. V.

B. He is the original and chief sinner.

Satan sinneth from the beginning and is the arch-sinner of the universe: I John 3:8.

C. He is a murderer and the instigator of murder.

The devil is cruel and brutal: he is a murderer at heart and the original one and is responsible for the physical and spiritual death of the race: John 8:44.

D. He blinds men's minds to saving truth.

The devil is heartless and designing: he blinds the minds of men to prevent their being saved, and to secure their condemnation with himself: II Cor. 4:4, R. V.

E. He steals the saving truth from the hearts of men.

Satan takes away the Word of God out of the hearts of men where it has been sown, in order to keep them from believing and being saved: Luke 8:12.

VIII The Work of Satan.

It is a law of scriptural interpretation that the first mention of anything in God's Word determines its meaning throughout Scripture to a very marked degree. An illustration of this is seen in connection with Satan. The first time he is brought before us in Holy Writ his true character is unveiled, the sphere in which he works is clearly revealed, and the methods he employs are expressly set forth. His subtlety is indicated in that he used a serpent as his means of approach to our first parents; his cowardice, in that he assaulted the woman rather than the man; his evil nature, in that he lied to her and sought her ruin; his character of tempter, in that he captured his victim by means of an attractive bait ("Ye shall be as God"); his sphere of operations in that he incited Eve to commit not a moral but a spiritual sin—transgression of God's command; his real object of attack—God's Word: "Yea hath God said?" In the sentence which God pronounced upon that old serpent, the devil, Satan's purpose and program is definitely revealed—Gen. 3:15. There is much in this remarkable announcement which calls for study and comment; but for our present purpose we limit ourselves to one declaration—"enmity . . . between thy seed and her seed." We are here informed that the woman's "Seed"—the Lord Jesus Christ—is to be the object of Satan's unrelenting hatred. This reveals to us in a word the age-long work in which Satan has been engaged. Ever since the first Messianic prediction was uttered in Eden, Satan has been the enemy of the woman's Seed. The Person and Work of the Lord Jesus have been the objects of his attack.

His methods of opposition have followed two lines; namely,

1. A Work of Anticipation and Opposition.

Having learned that the woman's Seed was destined to "bruise" his head, Satan, by way of anticipation and opposition, sought to prevent His entry into this world. It may be that his first attempt along this line is to be seen in the death of Abel. Possibly Satan thought that Abel was the promised "Seed" of the woman, and for that reason stirred up Cain, "who was of that wicked one" (I John 3:12) to kill his brother. His next attack was more daring. It appears from Gen. 6 that a considerable number of Nephilim, termed "Sons of God"—fallen celestial beings—left their own habitation (Jude 6) came down to this earth and co-habited with the daughters of men in an attempt to destroy the human species by producing a race of monstrocities. How nearly Satan succeeded in this attempt the student of the Word is well aware—with the exception of a single family, Noah and his house, all mankind was destroyed by God at the flood.

At a later date, God revealed to Abraham His purpose that all the families of the earth should be blessed through his "Seed," in other words, that the coming Redeemer and Bruiser of Satan should be one of his descendants according to the flesh. Hence, we may understand why, some four hundred years later when in Egypt the offspring of Abraham began to wax numerous, that Satan again attempted to frustrate the purpose of God by seeking to destroy the channel through which the promised "Seed" was to come. There can be no reasonable doubt but that it was Satan who moved Pharaoh to issue the edict commanding that all the male children of the Hebrews should be put to death!

At a still later date, God made known the fact to King David that the promised Messiah should be born of the royal tribe of Judah. Shortly afterwards we find Satan making another attempt to thwart God as may be seen in the dividing of the Kingdom, when the ten tribes made a determined and prolonged effort to exterminate the tribe of Judah! Other examples might be cited from the Old Testament (Haman's plot to slay all the Jews, etc.), in which may be seen the efforts of Satan attempting to prevent the advent of the woman's Seed; but we turn now to the New Testament. When the fulness of time was come and God sent forth His Son, born of a woman (Gal. 4:4), Satan promptly made an effort to destroy the young child's life. Through Herod he slew all the children in Bethlehem from two years old and under. But his effort was in vain, for being warned of God in a dream, Joseph had taken the young child and His mother and had fled into Egypt.

At the commencement of our Lord's ministry, in the temptation, Satan sought to make Him throw Himself down from the temple. A little later he so stirred up the hearts of our Lord's auditors that we read, they "rose up and thrust Him out of the city and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong. But He passing through the midst of them went His way" (Luke 4:29, 30). On another occasion, when wearied out with the day's work, our Lord sought sleep in the bow of a boat, another attempt was made upon His life. The Prince of the Power of the air lashed the Sea of Galilee into a fury, until the storm was so fierce that the disciples feared their ship was doomed, and it was not until the Creator of the sea commanded it to be still that the plot of the devil was foiled.

From Matt. 16:21-23 we may learn how Satan sought to turn our Lord from the purpose of His incarnation and mission, and this he did through the medium of Peter whom he caused to say with reference to the crucifixion which Jesus had just foretold, "Be it far from Thee Lord" (Mar. "Pity Thyself")—spare Thyself such humiliation as that. But Christ instantly detected the source of this plausible appeal, and turned and said unto Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offense unto me." The trail of the serpent is plainly to be seen around the cross itself. For without doubt it was Satan who instigated the challenge to Christ to demonstrate His deity by descending from the cross (Matt. 27:40). But Christ never faltered, patiently and majestically He bore His sufferings, until He cried in triumph, "It is finished," and surrendered His spirit into the hands of His Father. He sought also to keep Christ in the tomb after His burial by instigating the Roman authorities to securely seal the tomb and guard it with a company of soldiers. But here again he is defeated. The grave cannot retain its victim; death cannot hold the Lord of Life.

But Satan has not ceased his opposition to the Person and Work of Christ. He is still prosecuting his wicked designs, still endeavoring to frustrate the purposes of God and he is now aiming to nullify the virtues of Christ's atoning death.

2. A Work of Imitation and Perversion.

The great ambition and determination of Satan is to be like God. The boast of Lucifer was, "I will be like the Most High." In Satan's great scheme, he imitates and counterfeits the things God is doing, and so fine is his imitation that vast multitudes of people who are actually following Satan's error, think they are serving God. Satan is not an initiator but an imitator. He is God's ape.

God has an only begotten Son—the Lord Jesus, and so has Satan—“the son of perdition” (II Thes. 2:3). There is a Holy Trinity, and there is likewise a trinity of evil (Rev. 20:10). Do we read of the “children of God?” So also we read of “the children of the wicked one” (Matt. 13:28). Does God work in the former both to will and to do of His good pleasure? Then, we are told, that Satan is “the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience” (Eph. 2:2). Is there a “mystery of godliness” (I Tim. 3:16)? So also is there a “mystery of iniquity” (II Thes. 2:7). Are we told that God by His angel “seals” His servants in their foreheads (Rev. 7:3)? So also, we learn that Satan by his agent sets a mark in the foreheads of his devotees (Rev. 13:16). Are we told that “the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God (I Cor. 2:10)? Then Satan also provides his “deep things” (See Greek for Rev. 2:24). Did Christ perform miracles? So also can Satan (II Thes. 2:9). Is Christ the Light of the world? Then so is Satan himself “transformed into an angel of light (II Cor. 11:14). Did Christ appoint “apostles”? Then Satan has his apostles, too (II Cor. 11:13).

NOTE—Summary of Scripture teaching on the work of Satan:

- A. He originates and instigates sin: Gen. 3:1-6.
- B. He causes affliction and suffering: Acts 10:38; Luke 13:16.
- C. He causes death: Heb. 2:14; John 8:44.
- D. He allures to evil: I Chron. 21:1, R. V.; Matt. 4:1-10; I Cor. 7:5; I Thes. 3:5.
- E. He brings men into captivity: I Tim. 3:7; II Tim. 2:26.
- F. He inspires wicked thoughts and purposes: Acts 5:3; John 13:2.
- G. He enters into and controls men: Eph. 4:27; John 13:27.
- H. He blinds the minds of men: II Cor. 4:4.
- I. He dissipates truth from the Hearts of men: Mark 4:15; Luke 8:12, R. V.; Matt. 13:19.
- J. He produces a fruitage of evil doers: Matt. 13:39.
- K. He accuses believers: Rev. 12:9, 10; Job 1:6-11; 2:3-5.
- L. He authorizes and energizes his ministers: II Cor. 11:13-15; Rev. 3:9.
- M. He opposes those who are engaged in God's service: II Cor. 12:7; Zech. 3:1; Dan. 12:13; I Thes. 2:18, R. V.
- N. He sifts and tries believers: Luke 22:31.
- O. He will energize the anti-Christ: II Thes. 2:9, 10, R. V. See also Rev. 12:9, 17; 13:1, 2, 7.

IX The Future Destiny of Satan.

The Satanic program as outlined in the Scriptures would seem to indicate that Satan cherishes hopes of ultimate victory for his cause, nevertheless, the same Scriptures foretell in awful tones the certainty of his coming defeat and doom. Though the execution of judgment upon him has been long held in abeyance, yet, shall he not escape the due reward of his iniquities. The Serpent's head has not yet been “bruised,” but the time of his complete humiliation is not far distant—“And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly” (Rom. 16:20).

There seem to be four stages in the punishment meted out to the devil. The first stage is coterminous with Satan's apostasy (Ezek. 28:16). On the occasion of his apostasy Satan seems to have been cast out of the highest heavens. To this our Lord evidently refers when He says, “I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven (Luke 10:18). Since that time, and up to the present, the lower heaven (heavenly places, Eph. 6:12) is apparently the abode of the Evil One—though he still has access to the Heaven of heavens (Job. 1:6), and also to our earth (Job 1:7).

The second stage of his punishment will be marked by his being cast out of heaven as the result of the war in heaven between himself and Michael, the archangel, (Rev. 12:7-9). His sphere of operations from thence will be limited to the earth. He is no longer granted access to God. Here Satan is pictured as being in great wrath as he is banished from heaven into the earth, "knowing that he has but a short time." This will doubtless occur sometime between the rapture of the Church, when Christ returns for His saints (I Thes. 4:16), and the beginning of the Millennium, when our Lord comes back to the earth with his saints to reign in righteousness for a thousand years.

The third stage in the execution of his judgment will consist of his arrest and imprisonment in the abyss (Rev. 20:1-3). An angel officer, the High Sheriff of heaven, will break in on the scene of Satan's earthly activities (the great tribulation) and will lay hold on—arrest—the Old Dragon—Satan—Devil—Serpent, and bind him for a thousand years, casting him into the bottomless pit.

The fourth stage will be the last and mark his final doom and seal his eternal destiny (Rev. 20:10). At the close of the Millennium, Satan is released from the bottomless pit and is given a short season of liberty, during which he once more gives evidence of the inveteracy of his wickedness and of the unchangeability of his evil heart: Rev. 20:7-9.

Satan is thus revealed as having been first created perfect in all his ways, mighty in power, and full of beauty and wisdom; but, having apostatized, he was demoted from the exalted position assigned to him. Though cast down and yet having access to God, he is seen wresting the world sceptre from man; and ruling as the Prince of this world, until the judgment of the cross; and after that he still rules as a usurper. At the end of the age he is deprived of his position in the heavenlies and cast down to the earth; and from thence into the abyss; and, finally is banished to the lake of fire forever.

NOTE—Summary of Scripture teaching concerning God's judicial dealings with Satan:

- A. He was demoted from his position as the "covering cherub": Ezek. 28:16.
- B. He is under a perpetual curse: Gen. 3:14, 15.
- C. He is a conquered enemy: John 12:31; 16:8-11; I John 3:8, R. V.; Col. 2:15, R. V. See also Heb. 2:14.
- D. He will be cast out of the heavenlies: Rev. 12:7-12.
- E. He will be confined in the abyss for a thousand years: Rev. 20:1-3.
- F. He will be loosed for a little season after the Millennium: Rev. 20:3, 7-19.
- G. He will be cast into the lake of fire: Rev. 20:10.

X The Believer's Rightful Attitude and Action toward Satan.

The believer is called upon to face a world ruling foe, who, with all his kingdom and power, is seeking to break and mar that life into which the divine nature has been received. The revelation of Satan's present position and power should disarm the believer of all self-confidence respecting his own ability to successfully contend with this foe.

The Scriptures present certain conditions and requirements which are essential to the believer's present victory over Satan, which may be summarized as follows:

1. Redemption Rights are to be Claimed by the Believer.

The believer should claim his redemption rights in Christ Jesus who died to destroy the works of the devil and to render his power null and void: Eph. 6:16, R. V.; Heb. 2:14, R. V.; Col. 2:15, R. V.; Rev. 12:11, R. V.; I John 3:8, R. V.

2. Full Equipment is to be Appropriated by the Believer.

We should put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil: Eph. 6:11-18, R. V.

3. Strict Self-control is to be Maintained by the Believer.

We should leave no room, give no place to the devil by evil passion or practice: Eph. 4:27 cf. Gal 5:22, 23.

4. Vigilance is to be Exercised by the Believer.

The fact of Satan's existence, activity and power, should make us circumspect and watchful: I Peter 5:8, R. V. cf. II Cor. 2:11.

5. Resistance is to be Made by the Believer.

We should resist the devil in God's strength and victory is then assured: James 4:7; I John 2:14.

STUDY QUESTIONS ON ANGELOLOGY

1. Discuss the probability of the existence of angels from the analogy of nature.
2. Quote one passage each from the Old and New Testaments proving the fact of the existence of angels.
3. Give the nine-fold description of the nature of angels and discuss notes where given.
4. Give the six-fold description of the moral character of angels and discuss fully Mr. Larkin's answer to the question, "Who are the angels referred to by Peter and Jude?"
5. Give a detailed description of the ministry of good and evil angels.
6. Give the practical values of the doctrine of angels, good and evil.
7. Discuss the lack of clearness in the presentation of the subject of demon possession in the Authorized Version of the New Testament, and show why the Revised Version is preferable.
8. Give the three-fold recognition of the fact of the existence of demons and discuss the theoretical interpretations of the attitude of the Scriptures towards the subject.

9. Discuss fully the nature and character of demons under the following heads: They are Personal Intelligences; They are Spirit Beings; They are Satan's Emissaries; They are a Multitude in Number; They are Degraded in Moral Character and Principle; They Seem to be Disembodied Spirits; Under note, Demons are to be Distinguished from Angels, bad and good.
10. Describe the three-fold power and work of Satan.
11. Discuss the question of demon control in the present time and the two-fold method by which it is exercised.
12. Discuss the modern conception of Satan and his usual mode of procedure.
13. Discuss the fact of the existence of Satan as shown by the Scriptures and quote one passage proving it.
14. Give in detail the three-fold proof of the personality of Satan.
15. Discuss the origin of Satan and give the gist of the teaching of Ezek. 28:11-19.
16. Describe the original perfections, original position, and original domain of Satan.
17. Describe the fall of Satan, including its cause and result.
18. Give the three-fold description of the present abode of Satan.
19. Describe fully the present position of Satan.
20. Discuss the character of Satan, as revealed by the names given him, under the following heads: Satan; The Devil; The Prince of the Power of the Air; The Prince of this World; The God of this Age; Abaddon-Apollyon; Other Designations of Satan.
21. Describe the character of Satan as revealed by the direct teaching of the Scriptures.
22. Discuss the work of Satan under the two heads: A Work of Anticipation and Opposition; A Work of Imitation and Perversion.
23. Give the summary of Scripture teaching on the work of Satan.
24. Discuss the future destiny of Satan.
25. Give summary of Scripture teaching concerning God's judicial dealings with Satan.
26. Give the various aspects of the believer's rightful attitude and action toward Satan and quote one passage of Scripture with each.

CHAPTER TEN

ESCHATOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF LAST THINGS

- A. PHYSICAL DEATH AND THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.
- B. THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.
- C. THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD.
- D. THE JUDGMENTS.
- E. THE FINAL DESTINY OF THE RIGHTEOUS AND THE WICKED.

Eschatology, or the doctrine of last things, is the completion and climax of the teaching contained in the revelation which God has made to man. There is nothing pertaining to the individual Christian character, nor the Christian Church as a whole, which finds its destined perfection here upon earth, or in this life (I Cor. 13:10; Rom. 8:24). As preparatory for the complete and final manifestation of the kingdom of God, certain events must take place, such as death, Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the body, and the divine judgments. As stages in the future condition of men, there is to be an intermediate and an ultimate state, both for the righteous and for the wicked. These events and states are taken up in the following discussion in what seems to be their logical order.

NOTE—The importance of the study of Eschatology is shown by the following reasons as suggested by W. H. Hubbard:

- A. The truths contained in the doctrines treated under the head of eschatology are part of the All Scripture given by inspiration of God, "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (II Tim. 3:16, 17). These doctrines, ignored, deprive the man of God, not only of that much instruction in righteousness, but also of that much training and equipment for good works. This means loss in character, experience, knowledge of God's plans, His Christ, and redemption. It means that the man of God lacks also that much of experience in redemption, for these events are part of redemption and the substance of the Christian's hope.
- B. One may resist the Holy Spirit and thus grieve and quench Him by not studying these great truths. They are part of the truth into which the Spirit is to lead the disciples of Jesus. He was given not only to convict the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment, nor yet simply to comfort, regenerate and empower disciples; but also to glorify Jesus, to guide into truth, to explain the sayings of the Saviour, and to show things to come (John 16:7-15).
- C. These doctrines must be studied and known in order to rightly divide the Word of truth. One who does not rightly divide the Word is a workman who will be ashamed, and fall of the approval of God (II Tim. 2:15), for rightly dividing the Word of truth is impossible where so large a part of that Word is unknown or ignored.
- D. One must be familiar with the doctrines of last things in order to make answer to any who asketh a reason concerning his hope (I Peter 3:15). The Christian's hope not only includes the last things but consists of them. They constitute his hope.
- E. One ought to know these doctrines in order to guard himself against error and false teachings. Only a knowledge of the truth of these doctrines and an experience of their relations to Jesus Himself can guard one from the errors, caricatures and false interpretations of them (Eph. 4:11-21). Truth is ever the safe-guard against error.
- F. Christ Jesus cannot be fully preached without these doctrines. He taught them. They include part of the work for which He came, lived, and died. They are part of the inheritance of light secured for the believer by His shed blood, and part of the plan by which His work is to be completed and God's purpose realized. They are an important and essential part of the Word, the work and the glory of Christ Jesus. They are part of Himself. His glory and soul satisfaction are bound up in these last things (Rom. 15:19).
- G. A knowledge of these doctrines is necessary to intelligent cooperation with God in His plan of redemption, as revealed in the Word. Uncertainty and indefiniteness in one's ideas of the divine plan and the order of events therein make for uncertainty in endeavor and often marking of time in present activities. Much beating of the air and irksomeness are due to this (I Cor. 9:26). Not knowing what comes next in the plan, one knows not how to prepare for it.
- H. Present world conditions demand a knowledge of these doctrines if one is to understand the meaning of these conditions, and their relation to the divine program. Jesus reproved the people of His day for not reading aright the "signs of the times" (Matt. 16:3.)
- I. These doctrines must be known in order that one may be in readiness for the next event. Exhortations are given to watch and be ready. If one is not familiar with the teaching concerning last things he cannot know for what to watch and be ready.
- J. These truths should be studied because of the beneficial effects resulting therefrom upon the life and character.

A. Physical Death and the Intermediate State.

I Physical Death.

Physical death is the separation of the soul, including the spirit, from the body. We distinguish it from spiritual death, or the separation of the soul from God; and from the second death, or the banishment from God and final misery of the reunited soul and body of the wicked: Heb. 9:27; Isa. 59:2; Rom. 7:24; Eph. 2:1; Rev. 2:11; 20:14; 21:8. Although physical death falls upon the unbeliever as part of the original penalty of sin, to all who are united in Christ it loses its aspect of penalty, and becomes a means of discipline and of entrance into larger life. See Psa. 116:15; Rom. 8:10; 14:8; I Cor. 3:22; 15:55.

NOTE—To neither saint nor sinner is death a cessation of being. This is in opposition to the position of the annihilationist. We base our position on the following deductions from the Scriptures:

- A. The account of the curse in Genesis, and the subsequent allusions to it in Scripture, show that, while the death then incurred includes the dissolution of the body, it does not include cessation of being on the part of the soul, but only designates that state of the soul which is the opposite of true life, viz., a state of banishment from God, of unholiness, and of misery: Gen. 2:17 cf. 3:8; 3:16-19, 22-24; Matt. 3:22; Luke 15:32; John 5:24; 6:47, 53, 63; 8:51; Rom. 5:21; 8:13; Eph. 2:1; 5:14; James 5:20; I John 3:14; Rev. 3:1.
- B. The Scriptural expressions, held by annihilationists to imply cessation of being on the part of the wicked, are used not only in connections where they cannot bear this meaning (Esther 4:16), but in connections where they imply the opposite. See as illustrations the following passages: Gen. 6:11; Psa. 119:176; Isa. 49:17; 57:1, 2; Dan. 9:26; Matt. 10:6, 39, 42; Acts 13:41 cf. Matt. 6:16; I Cor. 3:17; II Cor. 7:2; II Thes. 1:9.
- C. The passages held to prove that the annihilation of the wicked at death cannot have this meaning, since the Scriptures foretell a resurrection of the unjust as well as of the just; and a second death, or a misery of the reunited soul and body, in the case of the wicked: Acts 24:15; Rev. 2:11; 20:14, 15; 21:8.
- D. The words used in Scripture to denote the place of departed spirits have in them no implication of annihilation and the allusions to the condition of the departed show that death, to the writers of the Old and New Testaments, although it was the termination of man's earthly existence, was not an extinction of his being or his consciousness: Gen. 25:8, 9; 35:29; Num. 20:24; Deut. 10:6; Job 3:13, 18; Ex. 32:21; Luke 16:23; 23:43; I Sam. 28:19.
- E. The terms and phrases which have been held to declare absolute cessation of existence at death are frequently metaphorical, and an examination of them in connection with the context and with other Scripture is sufficient to show the untenableness of the liberal interpretation put upon them by the annihilationists, and to prove that the language is merely the language of appearance: John 11:11, 14; Ec. 9:10; Psa. 146:4.
- F. The most impressive and conclusive of all proofs of endless being, however, is afforded in the resurrection of Jesus Christ—a work accomplished by His own power, and demonstrating that the spirit lived after its separation from the body (John 2:19, 21; 10:17, 18). By coming back from the tomb, He proves that death is not annihilation (II Tim. 1:10).

II The Intermediate State.

The Scriptures teach the existence of both the righteous and the wicked, after death, and prior to the resurrection. In the intermediate state, the soul is without its permanent body, yet this state is for the righteous one of conscious joy, and for the wicked, one of conscious suffering. That the righteous do not receive their permanent glorified bodies at death, is plain from I Thes. 4:16, 17 and I Cor. 15:52, where an interval is intimated between Paul's time and the rising of those who slept. The resurrection was to occur in the future, "At the last trump." So the resurrection of the wicked had not yet occurred in any single case (II Tim. 2:18—it was an error to say that the resurrection was "past already"); it was yet future (John 5:28-30—"the hour cometh" not "now is," as in verse 25; Acts 24:15—"There shall be a resurrection"). Christ was the first fruits (I Cor. 15:20, 23). If the saints had received the permanent body at death, the patriarchs would have been raised before death.

1. The Intermediate State of the Righteous.

- A. The soul of the believer, at its separation from the body, enters the presence of Christ: II Cor. 5:1-8; Luke 23:43.
- B. The spirits of departed believers are with God: Heb. 12:23; Ec. 12:7.
- C. The believers at death enter paradise: Luke 23:42, 43; II Cor. 12:4.
- D. The state of the believer, immediately after death, is greatly to be preferred to life in the body upon the earth: Phil. 1:23.
- E. The departed saints are truly alive and conscious: Matt. 22:32; Luke 16:22; 23:43 ("with me" = in the same state): I Thes. 5:10,
- F. Departed believers are in a state of rest and blessedness: Rev. 6:9-11; Rev. 14:13.

2. The Intermediate State of the Wicked.

- A. They are in prison, that is, are under constraint and guard: I Peter 3:19. There is no need of putting unconscious spirits under guard: restraint implies the power of action.
- B. They are in torment, or conscious suffering: Luke 16:23.
- C. They are under punishment: II Tim. 2:9 cf. verse 4.

NOTE—Two erroneous views are refuted by the above.

- A. The passages cited refute, on the one hand, the view that the souls of both righteous and wicked sleep between death and the resurrection. This view is based upon the assumption that the possession of a physical organism is indispensable to activity and consciousness—an assumption which the existence of a God who is pure spirit (John 4:24), and the existence of angels who are spirit beings (Heb. 1:14), show to be erroneous. Although the departed are described as "spirits" (Ec. 12:7; Acts 7:59; Heb. 12:23; I Peter 3:19), there is nothing in this "absence from the body" (II Cor. 5:8) inconsistent with the activity and consciousness ascribed to them in the Scriptures above referred to. When the dead are spoken of as "sleeping" (Dan. 12:2; Matt. 9:24; John 11:11; I Cor. 11:30; 15:51; I Thes. 4:14; 5:10), we are to regard this as simply the language of appearance, and as literally applicable only to the body.
- B. On the other hand, these passages refute the view that the suffering of the intermediate state is purgatorial. According to the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church, "all who die at peace with the church, but are not perfect, pass into purgatory." Here they make satisfaction for the sins committed after baptism by suffering a longer or shorter time, according to the degree of their guilt. The church on earth, however, has power, by prayers and the sacrifice of the Mass, to shorten these sufferings or to remit them altogether. But we urge, in reply, that the passages referring to suffering in the intermediate state give no indication that any true believer is subject to this suffering, or that the church has any power to relieve from the consequences of sin, either in this world or in the world to come. Only God can forgive, and the church is simply empowered to declare that upon the fulfillment of the appointed conditions of repentance and faith, He does actually forgive. This theory, moreover, is inconsistent with any proper view of the completeness of Christ's satisfaction (Gal. 2:21; Heb. 9:28); of justification through faith alone (Rom. 3:28); and of the condition after death, of both righteous and wicked as determined in this life (Ec. 11:3; Matt. 25:10; Luke 16:26; Heb. 9:27; Rev. 22:11).

It should be added that while the Scriptures represent the intermediate state to be one of conscious joy to the righteous and of conscious pain to the wicked, they also represent this state to be one of incompleteness. The perfect joy of the saints, and the utter misery of the wicked, begin only with the resurrection and final judgment.

B. The Second Coming of Christ.

The question of the return of the Lord Jesus Christ to this earth is one which today challenges most keenly the interest of Christian men all over the world.

There are four great advents spoken of in the Scriptures: that of the first Adam in creation; that of the Second Adam in incarnation; the advent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost; and the future return of our Lord. Associated with the advent of the first Adam is the fall; associated with that of the Second Adam is the atonement of Christ; associated with the coming of the Holy Spirit is the birth of the Church; and associated with the return of Christ is the establishment of His Kingdom. Standing between the advents of the first Adam and the Second Adam is the altar pointing back to the fall of man and pointing forward to Christ's atoning death. Standing between the two advents of Jesus is the Lord's Supper, pointing backward to His death and looking forward to His coming again. The Lord's Supper will be observed only between the two advents (1 Cor. 11:36). The greatest event of past history is the first advent of Jesus: the greatest event of future history is the second advent of Christ.

I The Importance of the Second Coming of Christ.

1. Its Importance is Shown by the Prominence Given to It.

If prominence in the law of emphasis, and emphasis determines importance, then the importance of the Second Coming of Christ is established.

(1) It is given prominence in the Bible as a whole.

More space is given to the doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ, it is said, than to that of the atonement; where the atonement is mentioned once, the Second Advent is referred to twice. Where the first coming of Christ is mentioned once, that of His Second Coming is mentioned eight times. Of the twenty-seven books in the New Testament, all but four of them refer to it. One out of every twenty-five verses in the New Testament makes mention of the Second Coming. Fifty times or more in the New Testament, we are exhorted to readiness for the realization of this blessed hope. Entire chapters, such as Matt. 24 and 25, Luke 21, Mark 13 are devoted to this subject, as are whole books, such as I and II Thessalonians and Revelation. It is an interesting fact that each chapter of the First Epistle to the Thessalonians closes with a reference to the Second Advent (1:10; 2:19; 3:13; 4:14-18; 5:23). In the 216 chapters of the New Testament, it is said there are 318 references to this doctrine.

(2) It is given prominence in Old Testament prophecy.

By far the greater number of predictions concerning Christ in the Old Testament are connected with His Second Coming. The same Prophets that spoke of Christ's first coming speak with equal clearness of His Second Advent into the world. It is said that prophecy occupies one-fifth of the Scripture, and the Second Advent occupies one-third of prophecy.

NOTE—I. M. Haldeman thus describes the prophetic portrayal of the Return of Christ:

The moment we open the Scriptures we find an anticipative picture of the Second Coming in Adam, exalted to headship, dominion, glory and power, as the "figure of Him Who was to come." Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesies that the Lord is coming in glory. Abraham catches glimpses of Him as the coming Man and rejoices in view of His day. Jacob has a vision of the Epiphany and splendor when, surrounded by the angelic host, the Lord God looks down from the height of the golden ladder. Moses sees that revelation of Him in the burning bush, not as the weak and crucified, but as Yaveh, the Coming One, coming in triumph. The Psalms are full of the one utterance, uttering His coming and portraying the movement in Heaven when the whole universe shall be attuned in rhythm to the music of His Kingly descent. Isaiah spells it out in the notes of seraphic splendor and in the announcement of earth's response from exalted mountain, shivering earth and tossing seas. Jeremiah depicts the moment when at His coming Jerusalem shall no longer be as the forsaken who binds her hair with the braid of widowhood, but as Jerusalem the holy, Jerusalem whose name shall be the Lord our Righteousness, and unto whom shall be gathered the nations, as unto the throne of the Lord. Ezekiel beholds Him coming in the chariots of cherubic glory. Daniel sets Him forth in the center of ten thousand times ten thousand of shining angels, coming to take unto Himself the crowns of all the kings of all the earth, as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. The minor prophets on every page proclaim that He is coming. Hosea declares it in language of rebuke to the people who have denied Him; Joel, in speech that makes the tongue to burn and the ears to tingle, while Habakkuk rises to the heights of sublimity in a diction unequalled, as he testifies of the God who shall come from Teman and the Holy One who shall cover the Heavens with His glory, Who shall fill the earth with His praise, before Whose feet shall go the pestilence and burning coals, who shall stand and measure the earth, drive asunder the nations, scatter the everlasting mountains, receive the homage of the perpetual hills as they bow before Him and acknowledge that His ways are everlasting, and who shall fill the earth, the whole earth, with the glory of His presence. The last utterance of the Old Testament, as it is of the New, is, that He is coming."

(3) It is given prominence in the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ Himself taught in clear, unmistakable language His coming again to the earth, not only in those wonderful words of comfort found in John 14:1-3, but also in many other places in the Gospels. In parable and exhortation, before His disciples, before the multitude, and when arraigned before His judges, He talks of His coming again: Luke 17:20-37; 19:11-27; Matt. 24 and 25; Mark 13; Luke 21.

(4) It is given prominence by the witness of angels.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews lays special stress on the trustworthiness of the testimony of angels. He speaks of it as being "steadfast," for angels are ministering spirits, messengers, the very mouthpieces of God. Everything the angels, who were the announcers of Christ's first coming, said about that coming, was true. The angelic testimony regarding the Second Coming of Christ is found in Acts 1:10, 11. These words are capable of no other interpretation than that the same Jesus the disciples were beholding vanishing from their wondering view would again come to the earth as they had seen Him leave it. The entire book of Revelation may be regarded as angelic testimony to the Second Advent and the accompanying events, for Christ "sent and signified it by His angel unto His servant John."

(5) It is given prominence in the preaching of the Apostles.

Jesus promised the Apostles that He would send unto them the Holy Spirit to "guide them into all the truth," "show them things to come," and "bring to their remembrance whatsoever things He had said unto them" (John 14:26; 15:26, 27; 16:13-15). It is, therefore, important to know what these men thus equipped have to say concerning this subject. These all with no uncertain sound give a united testimony to the fact of Christ's Coming.

- A. Peter's testimony: Acts 2:30-36; 3:19-26; I Pet. 1:5, 7, 11, 13; 4:7, 13; 5:4; II Pet. 1:16-19; 3:3, 4, 7-10, 12, 14.
- B. Paul's testimony: I Thes. 1:10; 2:19; 3:13; 4:14-18; 5:23; II Thes. 1:7-10; 2:1-11; Rom. 2:16; 8:18, 19-23; 11:25, 26; 13:11, 12; I Cor. 1:7, 8; 5:5; II Cor. 5:1-10; Phil. 1:6; 3:21; I Tim. 4:1; II Tim. 4:8; Titus 2:13; etc.
- C. John's testimony: John 14:1-3; 21:22; I John 2:28; 3:2; Rev. 1:7; 11:15-17; 22:7, 12, 20.
- D. James' testimony: James 5:7-9.
- E. Jude's testimony: Jude 14, 21, 24.

2. Its Importance Is Shown by the Practical Value of the Doctrine.

The truth of the Second Coming of Christ is eminently practical. It is bound up with every practical exhortation to Christian obligation, service and attainment.

- (1) It is bound up with the exhortation to meet together on the Lord's day: Heb. 10:25.
- (2) It is bound up with the exhortation to properly observe the Lord's supper: I Cor. 11:26.
- (3) It is bound up with the exhortation to love one another: I Thes. 3:12, 13.
- (4) It is bound up with the exhortation to patience: James 5:7, 8.
- (5) It is bound up with the exhortation to a holy life: I John 3:3; Titus 2:11-13; I Thes. 5:23.
- (6) It is bound up with the exhortation to watchfulness: Mark 13:34-37.
- (7) It is bound up with the exhortation to Christian activity: Rom. 13:11, 12.
- (8) It is bound up with the exhortation to abide in Him: I John 2:28.
- (9) It is bound up with the exhortation not to judge one another: I Cor. 4:4, 5.
- (10) It is bound up with the exhortation to pastoral fidelity: II Tim. 4:1, 2; I Pet. 5:2-4.
- (11) It is bound up with the exhortation to comfort and console those who mourn their Christian dead: I Thes. 4:16-18.
- (12) It is bound up with the exhortation to zeal for the salvation of souls. I Cor. 4:3-5; I Thes. 2:19, 20 cf. I Thes 1:9, 10.

3. Its Importance Is Shown by the Vital Relation Which It Sustains to the Other Doctrines of the Christian Faith.

It is an easily demonstrated fact that the statement of the Second Coming of Christ as recorded in the New Testament is bound up with every fundamental doctrine. It is so woven into these basic doctrines of the Christian faith, that the one cannot be denied without denying the others. Like the ephod of the high priest which was so wrought of gold and linen that the linen could not be extracted without pulling apart the gold wire, neither could the gold wire be removed without destroying the linen, so the Second Coming and the great fundamentals and all the flowering out beauties of the Christian faith are so inextricably inwrought that the hand which damages the one destroys the other.

- (1) It is bound up with the doctrine of the resurrection: I Cor. 15:23; John 5:28, 29 cf. I Thes. 4:16-18.
- (2) It is bound up with the doctrine and promise of the transfiguration of the living: I Cor. 15:51, 52.
- (3) It is bound up with the doctrine of sonship with God and likeness to Christ: I John 3:1, 2.
- (4) It is bound up with the doctrine and promise of rewards: II Tim. 4:7, 8; Rev. 22:12; I Pet. 5:4.
- (5) It is bound up with the doctrine of the atonement: Heb. 9:14-28 cf. Luke 1:8-10, 21.
- (6) It is bound up with the doctrine of future judgment: II Tim. 4:1.
- (7) It is bound up with the doctrine of sanctification: I Thes. 3:12, 13; I Thes. 5:23, R. V.

4. Its Importance Is Shown by the Estimate Placed upon It and the Emphasis Given to It by the Early Church.

The early Christian church believed in and ardently longed for the coming of Christ to overthrow the powers of evil and paganism as represented by the Roman Empire and that He might reign victorious in lands over which Caesar's eagles had never flown: I Thes. 1:9, 10; Heb. 9:28; Titus 2:13.

NOTE—The testimony of historians.

- A. Schaff, the eminent ecclesiastical historian, writes: "The most striking point in the eschatology of the Ante-Nicene age is the prominent chiliasm, or millenarianism, that is, the belief of a visible reign of Christ in glory on earth with the risen saints for a thousand years before the general resurrection and judgment. . . . It was a widely current opinion of distinguished teachers, such as Barnabas, Papias, Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, Tertullian, Methodius and Lactantius. The Christian chiliasm is the Jewish chiliasm spiritualized, and fixed upon the second, instead of the first, coming of Christ. It distinguishes two resurrections, one before and another after the Millennium, and makes the millennial reign of Christ only a prelude to His eternal reign in heaven, from which it is separated by a short interregnum of Satan."
- B. Gibbon, in his great work, "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire": "The ancient and popular doctrine of the Millennium . . . was carefully inculcated by a succession of Fathers from Justin Martyr and Irenaeus, who conversed with the immediate disciples of the Apostles, down to Lactantius, who was the preceptor of the son of Constantine. . . . It appears to have been the reigning sentiment of all orthodox believers."
- C. Mosheim: "The prevailing opinion that Christ was to come and reign a thousand years among men before the final dissolution of the world had met with no opposition until the time of Origen."
- D. Chillingworth: "The doctrine of the millenaries was believed and taught by the most eminent Fathers of the age next after the Apostles, and by none of that age opposed or condemned; therefore, it was the Catholic (i.e., universal) doctrine of those times."
- E. Gieseler, ecclesiastical historian: "This millenarianism became the general belief of the time."
- F. Stackhouse, theologian: "It cannot be denied that this doctrine has its antiquity, and was once the general opinion of all orthodox Christians."
- G. Bishop Newton, eminent writer on prophecy: "The doctrine of the Millennium was generally believed in the first three and purest ages."
- H. Bishop Russell, professor of ecclesiastical history in the Scottish Episcopal Church: "The belief was universal and undisputed."

II The Fact of the Second Coming of Christ.

1. Scriptural Statements of the Fact.

From Genesis to Revelation, the Bible is filled with the teaching of the Second Coming of Christ. It is not only set forth in type, figure, symbol, parable, and illustration, but also by direct statement.

The following passages establish this fact beyond question: John 14:3; Heb. 9:28; Phil. 3:20, 21; I Thes. 4:16-17; Acts 3:19-21, R. V.

2. Misinterpretations of the Fact.

- (1) It is misinterpreted to mean the coming of Christ in the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost.

That this is erroneous is seen by the following:

A. On the Day of Pentecost, immediately after the coming of the Holy Spirit, Peter urged the Jews to repent in order that Jesus, Whom for a time "the heavens had received," might be sent back again (Acts 3:19-21). This could not be done if His promised coming had already taken place.

B. It was not Christ, but the Holy Spirit, who came on Pentecost, and His coming was conditioned on Christ's absence, for Jesus said, "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you," (John 16:7). If the Holy Spirit is only another manifestation of Christ, then they are identical. This repudiates the doctrine of the Trinity.

C. The Acts and the Epistles were all written after Pentecost and these contain many references to the Second Coming as still future.

D. None of the predicted events which are to accompany the return of Christ occurred at Pentecost. See I Thes. 4:14-17.

E. The coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost marked the inception of the Church; the Second Coming of Christ marks the completion and removal of the Church.

F. Christ did not receive believers unto Himself at Pentecost, but rather came to them in the Person of the Holy Spirit, for although it may be admitted that the coming of the Holy Spirit, the one who was to take the place of Jesus, Jesus' other Self, was in a sense a coming, and a fulfillment of the promise of Jesus, in John 14:17-23, to come and dwell with His disciples, yet it was not THE coming.

- (2) It is misinterpreted to refer to His providential coming at the destruction of Jerusalem.

This tragedy of history is supposed by many to fulfill the prophecies spoken by Christ in His great discourse on the Mount of Olives, recorded in Matt. 24 and Mark 13, and the one also recorded in Luke 21. From a study of at least two of these passages (Mark 13 and Luke 21) it becomes evident that the capture of the Holy City by Titus may have been a real but only partial fulfillment of the words of Christ. As in the case of so many Old Testament prophecies, the nearer event furnished the colors in which were depicted scenes and occurrences which belong to a distant future, and in this case to the "end of the age." That this does not fulfill the predictions made concerning the Second Coming of Christ is made clear by the following:

- A. When Jerusalem fell the people of God were not delivered nor the enemies of God punished. The sign of the "Son of Man" did not appear in the heavens, as was predicted of the time when He comes again.
- B. The Lord was not manifestly present at the destruction of Jerusalem, it was destroyed by Roman soldiers.
- C. None of the events that are to occur at the Second Coming occurred at the destruction of Jerusalem, such as the resurrection of the dead, the translation of living saints, and the physical changes that are to occur at Jerusalem and in the land of Palestine at Christ's coming: Zech. 14:4-11; Ezek. 47:1-12.
- D. Jerusalem must be trodden down of the Gentiles until the "times of the Gentiles" are fulfilled, "then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory" (Luke 21:24-28). And the purpose of this coming is not to destroy Jerusalem but to restore it.
- E. Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus in 70 A. D., and yet John in the Revelation, written about A. D. 96, twenty-six years after the destruction of Jerusalem speaks of the Second Coming as yet future: Rev. 22:12, 20.

(3) It is misrepresented as meaning the conversion of the sinner. This cannot be for the following reasons:

- A. At conversion the sinner comes to Christ by faith for salvation (Matt. 11:28; John 5:40; 6:37), but Christ does not come to the sinner to affect his bodily transformation and translation as He shall at His second Coming.
- B. The Holy Spirit comes into the new born soul at regeneration (Rom. 5:5; Gal. 4:4-6), but Christ does not come in His own personality as set forth in predictive prophecy.
- C. None of the events to occur at Christ's coming take place at conversion.

(4) It is misinterpreted to signify the diffusion of Christianity throughout the world.

These are not identical, for:

- A. The diffusion of Christianity is gradual, while the Scriptures declare that the return of the Lord shall be sudden and unexpected, as a "thief in the night": Matt. 24:27, 36, 42, 44; I Thes. 5:2; Rev. 3:3.
- B. The diffusion of Christianity is a process, while the Scriptures invariably speak of the return of the Lord as an event.
- C. The diffusion of Christianity brings salvation to the wicked, whereas the return of the Lord is said to bring not salvation to them, but sudden destruction: I Thes. 5:2, 3; II Thes. 1:7-10.

(5) It is misinterpreted to mean death; that when we die Jesus comes to us. This is the most common theory.

That it is erroneous and false is shown by the following:

- A. The absurdity of this position is seen if we substitute the word "death" for the Coming of the Lord in such passages as deal with that subject: John 14:3; Acts 1:9; Phil. 3:20; I Thes. 4:16; Titus 2:13; Heb. 9:28.
- B. Jesus makes a distinction between His coming and the believer's death. John 21:22 shows how utterly impossible it is to make Christ's Coming refer to death. "Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me." "If I will that he tarry" evidently means "If I will that he remain alive." Now put Christ's Coming at the believer's death into these words and you get this nonsense: "If I will that he remain alive until he die what is that to thee?" See also Matt. 16:28.
- C. At death the believer goes to be with the Lord, death is a departure, not a coming: II Tim. 4:6; Phil. 1:23; II Cor. 5:6-8.
- D. His coming is not to be in connection with death but with resurrection (John 5:28, 29). He is the "resurrection and the life," and when He comes He will raise the dead and change the bodies of the living: Phil. 3:20, 21.
- E. A soul passes into eternity every second. It would be absurd to claim that Jesus leaves His place at the Father's right hand and comes in the clouds with a shout, the voice of the archangel and the trump of God every time a believer dies.
- F. The Scriptures distinctly teach that at the Coming of Christ we overcome, not succumb to, death. Death, the last enemy, is then abolished.

III The Character of the Second Coming of Christ.

1. It will be a Personal Coming.

By the personal coming of Christ, we mean His literal, visible, bodily return as contrasted with a coming which is merely figurative, spiritual, or merely providential. In other words, it means that He will come again in like manner as He went away: Acts 1:11.

(1) It will be Visible.

Jesus Christ in His Second Coming shall be seen by all, both the Church and the world; the one at the rapture, the other at the revelation: (Heb. 9:28; Rev. 1:7; Matt. 24:26, 27). In Acts 1:11 we read, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." The word "seen" always has reference to that which is tangible and is discovered with the eyes—something that one views with attention. For this reason, it is used in Matt. 6:1: "Do not your alms before men to be seen of them." It is a word that is closely related to the Greek word for "theater" (theatron). "Ye shall see the Son of Man coming on the clouds," etc. (Matt. 26:64). The word "see" signifies that which one is permitted to see with the eyes. From both these passages, as well as from the others referred to, it seems clear that a visible return of the Lord is meant. If the ascension of Christ was spiritual and metaphorical then perhaps His return may be also. The ascension, however, was a literal fact manifest to the physical senses, and so also shall be the Second Coming of Christ.

(2) It will be Bodily.

He is to come in like manner as He went away. He ascended in a literal body, the body in which He was crucified, which was raised from the dead—transformed and changed, yet real and tangible, capable of being touched and handled, in which He ate “a piece of broiled fish, and of an honey comb.” In His incarnation He became indissolubly united with our humanity linking it up with His deity. He lived as a man, He was crucified as a man, He was resurrected as a man, He ascended and is seated as the Mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus, and as the Son of Man He is coming again: Acts 1:11; I Tim. 2:5 and Matt. 16:27.

NOTE—The Second Coming of Christ, then, will be personal. It will not be His coming in His Spirit, or through the triumphs of His Church, neither will it be by death, even as it was not the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A. D. It will be the coming of the Christ Himself. The “man of sin” needs the “Son of Man” to overcome him, and the “son of perdition” needs “the Son of God” to destroy him.

The “parousia” is always a personal presence, never anything else (see John 14:3). It is the King Himself—not even His Kingdom—that we are to look for. We are told that in papyri from the Ptolemaic period down to the second century A. D. “parousia” (coming, presence) is traced in the East to the technical expression for the arrival or the visit of the king or emperor. It is not, therefore, a word peculiar to the New Testament. It was in use in the time of the apostles and they appropriated it for a sacred use (compare II Cor. 10:1, 2, 10, 11; Matt. 23:4, 27). The “coming,” therefore, is the “personal arrival.” This is clearly true of both Christ and antichrist as seen in II Thes. 2:7-9. The “man of sin” is personal, so is “the Son of Man” who destroys him.

2. It will be a Glorious Coming—in the Splendor of His Divine Sonship.

The Son of Man is coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, the glory of His Father and of the holy angels: Matt. 24:30; 16:27; Mark 8:38; II Thes. 1:7, R. V. Compare Matt. 24:30 with Ex. 19:9; 34:5; Psalms 97:1, 2; Matt. 17:5; Psalm 104:3; Isaiah 19:1 and also Acts 1:9-11.

NOTE—As on the great day of atonement the high priest put off his usual robes “for glory and for beauty” and appeared in spotless white, when he offered the sacrifice for sin and went into the holy place to intercede for the waiting people, so our great High Priest laid aside the robes of His imperial majesty when, stooping from heaven, He assumed His garb of sinless flesh, and offered Himself as the perfect sacrifice and entered into the holy place not made with hands to appear in the presence of God for us; but as the high priest again assumed his garment of scarlet and blue and purple and gold when he came forth to complete his work in the presence of the people, so Christ, when He returns to bless, and to receive the homage of the world, will be manifest in His divine glory.

3. It will be a Sudden Coming.

Jesus Christ will come as a thief, unannounced to the world at large,—without warning, unexpectedly, suddenly: (Rev. 22:7, 12, 20). The Greek word “tachu” translated “quickly” does not necessarily mean soon, or without delay, but here it has the thought of speed or suddenness. See also I Thes. 5:2, 3; Matt. 24:37-39; Luke 21:34, 35.

4. It will be a Two-fold Coming.

Just as the First Coming of the Lord extended over a period of thirty years, so the Second Coming involves a period of time and includes a series of events. At the First Coming, He was revealed as a babe in Bethlehem, later as the Lamb of God at His baptism, and as the Redeemer at Calvary. At the Second Coming He will first appear to His own suddenly to catch them away to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. This appearance is called the Rapture. Immediately after the Rapture there comes a period of terrible tribulation known as the day of Jacob's trouble. Following this there is another sudden but open manifestation of the Lord from heaven with His accompanying saints and holy angels, for the purpose of establishing the long promised Messianic kingdom in the earth. This is called the Revelation.

(1) The First Stage—The Rapture.

At this stage Christ comes in the air whither His believing saints are caught up to meet Him: 1 Thes. 4:13-17.

The term "rapture" is not found in the Scriptures but the thought which it expresses, snatching or catching away, is that which is contained in the principle passage referring to this stage of our Lord's Coming (1 Thes. 4:16, 17). It also finds illustration in other passages: Acts 8:39; II Cor. 2, 4.

At this stage there are two important events which transpire: the resurrection of the dead saints, and the transformation or bodily change of the living saints. After this they shall all be caught up together (raptured) to meet the Lord in the air.

(2) The Second Stage—The Revelation.

At this stage Christ comes to the earth and His saints come with Him: (Col. 3:4, R. V.; II Thes. 2:7, 8; 1:7-9). There may not be Scriptural warrant for confining the application of this term (revelation) to the second stage of the Return of the Lord as it is used in the Scriptures, in connection with both stages, but that it is especially applicable to the latter stage there can be no doubt.

This stage embraces the judicial and punitive aspect of the Second Coming, and includes the events immediately preparatory to the establishment of the millennial kingdom.

NOTE—The Coming again of Christ is two-fold: not two comings but two stages in the one coming, one great event with two separate parts. In the first stage, He comes as the "Morning Star" (Rev. 22:16); in the second, as the "Sun of Righteousness" (Mal. 4:1, 2). In the first He comes "into the air" (I Thes. 4:17); in the second, He descends to the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:3, 4). In the first, He comes to receive His bride to Himself (John 14:3); in the second, He comes to be received by repentant Israel (Zech. 11:10). The first stage is called "Our gathering together unto Him" (II Thes. 2:1); while the second stage is called "The revelation of Jesus Christ from heaven" (II Thes. 1:7).

5. It will be a Pre-millennial Coming.

By Pre-millennial we mean before the Millennium, that is, before the period of a "thousand years" spoken of in Rev. 20:1-6. This period is spoken of in other Scriptures as "The Kingdom" and is described in glowing terms by the prophets as a time when the earth shall be blessed with a universal rule of righteousness. The passage in Rev. 20:1-6 tells us that the length of the period shall be one thousand years. The whole tenor of Scripture teaching demands that Christ shall return before the Millennium.

- (1) The doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ is used as a basis for practical exhortation, and as an incentive to holy living and devoted service; but if this Coming cannot take place until one thousand years after the conversion of the world, as held by the Post-millenarians, then it loses all value as a stimulant and an incentive.
- (2) The blessings of the Millennium are to be introduced by judgments and these judgments are associated with the Second Coming of Christ. See the following passages: Isa. 11:9; 25:7 cf. Isa. 11:4; Psalm 2; Isa. 2:1, 3, 10-19; Isa. 66:23 cf. 66:15, 24; Zech. 14:9 cf. Zech. 14:2-5; Micah 4:3 cf. Micah 4:12, 13; Isa. 66:8 cf. Isa. 66:15, 16.
- (3) When Christ comes He will raise the dead, but the righteous dead are to be raised before the Millennium, that they may reign with Christ during the one thousand years, hence there can be no Millennium before Christ comes: Rev. 20:5.
- (4) When Christ comes He will separate the "tares" from the "wheat," but as the Millennium is a period of universal righteousness the separation of the "tares" and "wheat" must take place before the Millennium, therefore there can be no Millennium before Christ comes: Matt. 13:40-43.
- (5) When Christ comes, Satan shall be bound, but as Satan is to be bound during the Millennium, there can be no Millennium until Christ comes: Rev. 20:1-3.
- (6) When Christ comes, Antichrist is to be destroyed, but as Antichrist is to be destroyed before the Millennium, there can be no Millennium until Christ comes: II Thes. 2:8; Rev. 19:20.
- (7) When Christ comes, the Jews are to be restored to their own land, but as they are to be restored to their own land before the Millennium, there can be no Millennium before Christ comes: Ezek. 36:24-28; Rev. 1:7 (Zech. 12:10).
- (8) When Christ comes it will be unexpectedly, and we are commanded to watch lest He takes us unawares. Now, if He is not coming until after the Millennium, and the Millennium is not yet here, why command us to watch for an event that is over one thousand years off?

(9) The Scriptures teach that during the present dispensation, sorrow and suffering, and conflict with foes within and without will be the portion of the saints. The true Church is to be a persecuted, suffering, cross-bearing people by divine appointment and this she will continue to be until Christ comes, which precludes any Millennium until after His coming: John 15:19-21; 16:33; II Tim. 3:12; I Thes. 3:3; II Thes. 1:7-9.

(10) There is an absence in the New Testament of any hint or allusion, whatever, to the universal triumph of the Church in this age upon the earth, thus making the Millennium, which is a triumphal period for the people of God, absolutely impossible until the translation of the Church at Christ's coming and her return with Him in glorious manifestation.

(11) The Scriptural demand of the literal reign of Christ upon the earth requires that His coming should be pre-millennial. From the time that the first Adam surrendered the kingdom to Satan, the effort to re-establish it with man has been a continual failure, though it was given to Noah, to Saul, Nebuchadnezzar and to others: and it will be a failure in this sin-cursed earth until the second Adam, who has overcome Satan, shall return to purify the earth and establish righteousness (Gen. 9:1, 2; Dan. 2:37, 38; Isa. 9:7; Luke 1:32, 33; Jer. 3:17; Zech. 14:16; Acts 3:20, 21). The Millennial kingdom will be a literal and personal reign of Christ upon the earth, and not simply a spiritual exaltation of the Church: "A king shall reign in righteousness" (Isa. 32:11; Jer. 23:1-6), "Upon the throne of David" in "Jerusalem," "The apostles shall sit upon the twelve thrones" (Matt. 19:28), and "the saints shall reign upon the earth" (Rev. 5:10). Speaking of the kingdom, God says: "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until He come, whose right it is; and I will give it Him" (Ezek. 21:27).

Jesus is in heaven at the right hand of God upon the throne with the Father, in the holy of holies, making intercession for those who come unto God by Him. But heaven has only received Him until the time of the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets, when He shall come again to sit on the throne of His Father David. This again proves His coming to be pre-millennial.

NOTE 1—Statement of the Post-Millennial Theory.

"Daniel Whitby of England is generally regarded as the father of the modern post-millennial theory. This theory Bishop Henshaw calls 'a novel doctrine, unknown to the church for the space of sixteen hundred years,' and then 'advanced by the Rev. Dr. Whitby.' Whitby himself styles his own theory 'a new hypothesis,' and explains that his scheme of interpretation is 'framed according to it.' Vitranga, Faber and Brown are the ablest followers of Whitby. According to their original theory:

- "A. The first resurrection is a revival of the cause, principles, doctrines, character, and spirit of the early martyrs and saints. It is ecclesiastical, spiritual, national.
- "B. It lies in the future. The Millennium will be preceded by triumph over Papal Antichrist and the conversion of the Mohammedan world.
- "C. Satan no longer deceives; the doctrine of the martyrs and their spirit is revived like that of Elias in John the Baptist.

"D. The church will flourish and holiness will triumph for a thousand years. The world will enjoy paradisiacal blessedness while martyrs and saints in heaven sympathize with its joy. The triumph on earth will be universal.

"A very recent statement of Post-millennial doctrine may be found in Professor Beckwith's article on the 'Millennium,' in the new Schaff-Herzog 'Cyclopedia':

'A. Through Christian agencies the gospel gradually permeates the entire world and becomes immeasurably more effective than at present.

'B. This condition thus reached will continue for a thousand years.

'C. The Jews will be converted either at the beginning or some time during this period.

'D. Following this will be a brief apostasy and terrible conflict of Christian and evil forces.

'E. Finally and simultaneously there will occur the advent of Christ, general resurrection, judgment, the old world destroyed by fire, the new heaven and the new earth will be revealed.'" ("The Lord's Return," by J. F. Silver).

NOTE 2—Statements Concerning the Pre-millennial Position.

"Millenarian doctrine known in former years as Chiliasm, has, since the foundation of the church, been the Christian's blessed hope. Throughout her variable history, even when she was seemingly eclipsed, the church of God never lost sight of this brilliant star in her eschatological sky.

"In comparatively recent years, Whitbyism assumed that the millennial era would constitute the period of Christ's spiritual reign, as opposed to literal, and therefore predicated, universal salvation in this age. Accordingly, a conquered world, and an enthroned church were to be the harbingers of our Lord's return. Pre-millennialists consider Whitby's mode of interpretation akin to Origen's fanciful method of exegesis, and therefore unreliable.

"Pre-millennialism is a term of comparative newness. It was not needed in theological discussion for centuries. Post-millennialism having become popularized, it must needs be employed, in order to define the view held by the primitive church, that Christ will literally return from the heavens in order to effect the restitution foretold by the holy prophets (Acts 3:19-21). The regensis of nature and restoration of nations included in the promised restitution will occupy one thousand years, the duration of earth's antitypical Sabbath, including the resurrection of all believers, the imprisonment of Satan, with the destruction of the Antichrist. This hope, as ever imminent was the strong consolation of early believers, while martyrs in their sufferings were sustained through its constant expectation.

"Pre-millennialism has a notable history. During dark days, oft-recurring, when superstition and superficial views of religious life prevailed; when worldliness came in like a flood, and idolatrous practices abounded, this polestar of the Church grew dim to the point of vanishing. But yet again, its brightness grew apace, until now, when its intensified light shines afar. During the past century it has been brought into prominent recognition. The highest biblical scholarship has emphatically endorsed pre-millennialism as an integral part of the gospel scheme, and its profound literature has taken rank among essential theological discussions. Many of its living advocates are foremost in biblical research, are identified with aggressive, world-wide evangelism, and also intensely loyal to orthodox evangelicalism, and to inerrant biblical inspiration.

"Pre-millennialism does not base its claim on any single proof-texts, or series of texts, but rather on the whole trend of Scripture revelation. The much controverted passage in the Apocalypse (20:1-6) they explain in the glowing light of multiplied predictions. The learned Alford declared that the whole church for three hundred years understood the above verses in a plain, literal sense. John Albert Bengel, first of exegetes, gave unequivocal testimony to the view that Christ would come before the Millennium, and in this hope John Wesley, who was taught it by Bengel, exulted.

"Pre-millennialism protests against the application of those parables and discourses of our Lord which clearly point to a new kingdom, introduced and established on His return, to natural phenomena, such as death, war, national calamities and natural convulsions. These frequently recurring events are too superficial as adequate fulfillment of divine prophecy.

"Pre-millennialists believe that the Old Testament predictions of the sufferings and glory of Messiah bound the present age. They are as mountain peaks between which lies the Church, and beyond which lies the millennial kingdom. Pre-millennialists believe that the Bible given in the language of men must be interpreted by such rules as govern that language; that the literal meaning of a word be retained until it be determined that the language is figurative. Prophecy frequently appears in symbolic form, but most Scripture symbols are explained in the Scriptures.

"In addition to Old Testament predictions is New Testament promise inciting millennial expectation. Several hundred texts emphatically and inferentially teach that our Lord will return, visibly, bodily, audibly, gloriously, and that the world's condition at the time of His arrival precludes all possibility of a Millennium prior to that event. The age of Noah and the days of Lot prefigure our time-end, thereby harmonizing with parabolic and didactic teaching. The field of wheat and tares, the flock of sheep and goats, the net of good and bad fish prove that evil is not minimized as the age approaches its consummation. Accordingly the last days, and the latter times are vividly sketched in their woeful degeneracy (I Tim. 4:1-3; II Tim. 3:1-5). Therefore, pre-millennialism holds out no hope of a converted world before the return of Christ. Results of the advent will include the resurrection of believers unto glory, life to dead Israel, and liberty for groaning creation. The new kingdom will be free from Satan's presence when the glory of Jehovah will be revealed, and the will of God be done on the earth, even as it is done in heaven. The Shekinah will again appear in the Holy Land when the pierced feet of our glorious Lord shall stand on the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4; I Thes. 4:15-18; Rom. 8:15, 22, 23; Rev. 20:1-3; Isa. 4:5)." (G. C. N. Pop. and Crit. Enc.).

IV The Events Associated with the Second Coming of Christ.

The Second Coming of Christ is not only a point of time, it is also a period. It may be classed as an event but it also includes a series of events. It will include such events as the rapture of the church which embraces the resurrection of the dead saints, the transformation of living believers and the translation of all (I Thes. 4:13-17); the judgment seat of Christ (II Cor. 5:10); the marriage of the church to her Lord (Rev. 19); the events of the seventieth week of Daniel (Dan. 9:24-27); the great tribulation (Matt. 24:29; Dan. 12:1); the Coming of Christ with His saints or holy ones (I Thes. 3:13; Rev. 19); the great battle of Armageddon (Rev. 16:16); the judgment of the living nations (Matt. 25); the national conversion of the Jew (Rom. 11); the resurrection of the "rest of the dead" (Rev. 20:5, 6, 12); the great white throne judgment (Rev. 20:12-15); the new heavens and the new earth (Rev. 21 and 22); the end of all iniquity and the ushering in of everlasting righteousness (Dan. 9:24).

These events are presented in their various relations as follows:

1. With Reference to the Church.

We have already seen in our study of Ecclesiology that the Church is an organism composed of regenerate believers which constitute the body of Christ, having its inception on the day of Pentecost and which will find its completion at the first stage of Christ's coming. The Scriptures seem to indicate the following order of events attending this completion:

(1) The Rapture.

The most startling, and except for the testimony of the "sure word of prophecy" the most incredible, transaction of which we can conceive, is that set forth in the words, "caught up to meet the Lord in the air" (I Thes. 4:15-18). The lightning-flash of the advent, dazzling and blinding for a moment; the swift transition of the cloud chariot, and then "forever with the Lord"—this is the brief description of the ecstatic scene which we call the Church's translation. The rapture of the Church involves a three-fold process:

- A. The Resurrection of the Righteous Dead: I Thes. 4:16; I Cor. 15:22, 23.
- B. The Transformation of Living Believers: I Cor. 15:51, 52.

NOTE—There is a two-fold event, affecting the sainted dead and the saints that are living at the time of the rapture, and bringing both into one condition. The first finds its expression in the words, "and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (I Thes. 4:16); the second finds its expression in the words, "we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed" (I Cor. 15:51). This order and distinction are revealed in several passages:

A. In the story of the raising of Lazarus—that enacted prophecy of the first resurrection (John 11).

A beautiful miniature of the church is that home in Bethany, whose crowning honor is this, that "Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus." Like the body of Christ today, a part living and a part dead—"our friend Lazarus sleepeth"—this household was waiting the coming of the Lord. But notwithstanding the sickness and dying that were ravaging that home, Jesus "abode two days still in the same place where He was," just as He has already remained away from His church nearly two millenniums—"one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day,"—while sickness and mourning and death have been holding sway. Then the advent announcement, for which we also wait, was heard, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." Such will be the blessed errand on which our Lord will come when the time of His return arrives. Then hear the Lord's great advent exposition: "I am the resurrection and the Life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." It is no mere rhetorical amplification which we find here. This double office of Christ, and the corresponding two-fold work, exactly match the declarations which we have in Thessalonians and Corinthians (I Thes. 4:16; I Cor. 15:51). He is the "resurrection" to those who shall be in their graves at the time of His coming; He is the "life" to those who shall then be on the earth. To the first class He alludes when He says, "Though he were dead yet shall he live;" to the second He refers in the saying, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." But both, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, shall be brought into the same condition of "glorified corporeity" at the sound of the last trump.

B. In the transfiguration scene—that vivid tableaux of the glorious appearing of our Lord.

This exhibits the same truth in unmistakable outline. "And, behold, there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elias, who appeared in glory." These two men were the representatives of the two classes named above. Moses, coming up from his unknown sepulchre in the valley of Moab, as the forerunner of the dead who shall be raised at the advent of Christ; and Elias, returning from the presence of the Lord, as the representative of those who taste not of death, but are translated,—these, standing together with the Lord in transfiguration glory on the Mount, present to us a radiant rehearsal, a glowing epitome, of the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ (Matt. 16:28 cf. II Peter 1:16-18). In the great resurrection discourse (I Cor. 15) we find at the culmination of the argument the same double reference: "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Here are the two parties to the final transfiguration; and they are in an instant brought into the company of One for Whom they had been waiting. See also I Cor. 15:52-54.

C. The Translation of all believers: I Thes. 4:16-17.

NOTE—The words "Caught up to meet the Lord in the air," are crowded with suggestion, since they always signify "to meet and return with" as the disciples in Rome went out to meet Paul when they heard of his approach and accompanied him to the city; as the wise virgins are pictured as going forth to meet the bridegroom and attending him to the house of the bride, so by the same form of speech it is here implied that the church will be raptured away to join the Lord on His advancing way, and escort Him back to earth.

(2) The Examination and Reward of Believers (The judgment seat of Christ).

Immediately following the rapture of the believers they will be brought before the judgment seat of Christ for their examination, manifestation and rewards. This subject will be dealt with at length under the heading of "The Judgments," to which the reader is referred.

(3) The Marriage Supper.

After the saints have been "caught up" and "judged," they, as the "Church," will become the "Bride of Christ." The marriage of the Church is prophetically referred to by Jesus in the parable of the marriage of the king's son (Matt. 22:1-14), and is consummated in Rev. 19:7-9. See also Heb. 5:25-27; II Cor. 11:2.

The true Church (as contrasted with the "harlot"—the apostate church) is the Bride of Christ. The terms "body" and "bride" are both true of the Church: "body" is referred to when the vital and organic relation of the Church to Christ is intended; "bride," when its affection and love relation is to be emphasized. The Church is spoken of as the "body," "bride," and "wife" of Christ. Someone has well said that the "bride" is the temporary name, and "wife" the enduring name of the Church. The saints of God in the Church of Christ during this dispensation compose the "bride" to whom He will one day be united in marriage. The Marriage Supper of the Lamb is a figure under which is depicted the complete union between Christ and His Church.

(4) Manifestation with Christ.

The manifestation of glorified believers will be coincident with the manifestation or revelation of Jesus Christ at His coming. True believers are sons of God now, but they are not manifest as such. They are travelling through the world incognito, with no recognition given of their divine lineage. But at the Second Coming of Christ their divine sonship will be recognized and acknowledged; then they will come into the full realization of all its privileges and prerogatives: Col. 3:4; I John 3:1, 2; Jude 14.

2. With Reference to Apostate Christendom.

After the true Church, which is the "body" and the "bride" of Christ (Rev. 19:6-9; 21:2, 9; cf. Eph. 5:25-32), is translated, the professing church will doubtless go on with its worship, services and numerous activities just as before the saints were raptured. There will be, however, a marked growth in the apostasy within the professing church—the ecclesiastical organization left on the earth—until, finally, this false religious system, which, in contradistinction to the true Church, is called the harlot (Rev. 17:1-7 cf. II Cor. 11:2, 3) has become so morally and religiously corrupt that it is destroyed by the power of the Antichrist and the ten kings whose favor and protection it has so long enjoyed (Rev. 17:13-18). The doctrine of the decline and apostasy of this false ecclesiastical system is in strict harmony with the teaching of the Scriptures as shown by the following passages: II Thes. 2:3, 4; I Tim. 4:1, 2; II Tim. 3:1-5; 4:1-4; Luke 18:8, R. V. The seeds of this apostasy are already in the Church, indeed they have germinated and brought forth a too abundant harvest which will find its culmination in the great apostasy succeeding the removal of the true Church.

3. With Reference to Israel.

Prophetic truth concerning the coming of the Messiah in relation to Israel is so abundant and comprehensive that it can be dealt with only in outline form.

- (1) Israel is to be restored to her native land in an unconverted state: (Ezek. 36:24-28; 11:16-20; 39:25, 27-29; Jer. 32:37-41; 33:7-9. See also Isa. 11:11-16). These passages indicate that Israel is to be restored to her land in unbelief and that her conversion is to be subsequent to that restoration.

(2) The Jewish nation will rebuild the temple and restore its worship. The temple here referred to is not the millennial temple but a temple to be built and also destroyed during the interval between the rapture and the revelation. It is in this temple that the Antichrist causes the oblation to cease and sets up the abomination spoken of by Daniel (Dan. 9:27) where he "exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God" (II Thes. 2:4). II Thes. 2:3, 4; Dan. 11:31; Isa. 66:1-3, 6; Rev. 11:1, 2. For millennial temple see Ezek. 40 to 48.

(3) A covenant will be made between Israel and the Antichrist for one week (seven years), to be broken in the midst of it: Dan. 9:27 cf. John 5:43; Isa. 28:15, 18.

"And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate" (Dan. 9:27). "Many" refers to Israel, with whom he confirms the covenant. The Hebrew word "heptade" translated "week" signifies a period of seven, as decade signifies ten, and here stands for seven years. In the midst of the seven years, the Antichrist breaks his covenant with Israel and sets up his image in Jerusalem—the image spoken of in Rev. 13:14, 15.

(4) They will pass through the great tribulation called the time of "Jacob's trouble:" Jer. 30:6, 7; Dan. 12:1; Matt. 24:15-22, 29; Rev. 3:10; 7:14; Dan. 7:25.

This has its inception in the setting up of the abomination of desolation in the temple area at Jerusalem. This tribulation will be world wide but its focal point of intensest trial will be Jerusalem and Judea, where the great oppressor and his armies will be destroyed by the appearing of the Lord "to punish the host of high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth that are on the earth" (Isa. 24:21). It has more particularly to do with the Jew, but also in a more limited sense, with the world (Rev. 3:10), for its rebellion against God. "The Tribulation" describes a period of suffering unsurpassed: "such as was not since there was a nation, no, nor shall be" (Dan. 12:1). The suffering is to be greater than anything that has yet been seen.

(5) Israel will be converted as a nation at Christ's return: Zech. 12:10; Rev. 1:7; Rom. 11:26.

Israel will be converted, as was Saul of Tarsus, by a personal revelation of Jesus Christ—"Behold He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him." Then shall be fulfilled the prediction that a nation shall be born in a day.

(6) They will become missionaries to the nations: Psalms. 67:1, 2; Isa. 2:1-3; 27:6; Zech. 8:13, 21-23; Rom. 11:12, 15.

The Jews as a nation will be converted and become the great missionaries of the world (Acts 15:14-17). The Word of the Lord shall go forth from Jerusalem. It will be a world-wide evangelism. Redeemed and regenerate Israel will be the ministers; as it is written: "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord; men shall call you the ministers of our God" (Isa. 61:6). With their polyglot tongue they shall carry the tidings to the ends of the earth.

- (7) They will be permanently established in the land: Amos 9:15; Ezek. 34:28.

The Lord will remember His covenant with all Israel, with the ten tribes as well as with the two, with Ephraim as well as Judah. For twenty-five hundred years their identity has been lost amid the nations of the East whither they were carried. They have never been hidden from His eyes. By the exercise of His omnipotent power He will reveal them to the world and to themselves. He will call them out and separate them as fine gold is separated from the dross (Jer. 31:7-10). He will bring them into the land of Palestine. They shall no longer be two nations—separate peoples, the one wanderers among the Gentiles, and the other sunken in them as those who be in their graves. They shall be one nation upon the mountains of Israel (Ezek. 37:21, 22).

4. With Reference to the Gentile Nations.

- (1) There shall be an amalgamation of the Gentile nations under the leadership of Antichrist whose armies will be assembled against Jerusalem and Israel at the time when Jesus Christ shall be revealed from heaven taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Zechariah describes this judgment which shall be visited upon them as a plague that shall cause "their flesh" to "consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes" to "consume away in their holes, and their tongue" to "consume away in their mouth" (Zech. 14:2-4, 12, 13). This is spoken of in Scripture as the battle of "Armageddon." See Ezek. 38; Rev. 16.
- (2) There is to be a judgment of these nations immediately subsequent to the Battle of Armageddon commonly referred to as the judgment of the living nations. This will be dealt with under The Judgments.

5. With Reference to the Antichrist.

That which is revealed concerning the Antichrist may be summed up under the five following heads:

- (1) His Names.

A. The Enemy and the Avenger (Psa. 8:2).

As such he opposes all good and directs his vengeance toward the Israel of God.

B. Man of the Earth (Psa. 10:18).

This signifies the gross carnality of his deeds (Rom. 8:8).

C. King of Babylon (Isa. 14:4-17).

This implies all that is embodied in the Babylonian spirit; pride, power, idolatry, confusion and iniquity.

D. Little Horn (Dan. 8:9).

He shall arise in the common order of succession among earth's monarchs.

E. Vile person (Dan. 11:21).

This discovers his plebeian origin. He shall claim royal blood but not possess it.

F. Wilful King (Dan. 11:36).

He shall despise the restraints of wholesome law.

G. Man of Sin (II Thes. 2:3).

The full development of unregenerate manhood and the complete manifestation of evil is here suggested.

H. Son of Perdition (II Thes. 2:3).

As Son of Perdition he will be Satan's exclusive tool, impelled by a diabolic spirit.

I. Antichrist (I John 2:18).

He shall scorn the world's Redeemer and persuade the Jews he is their true Messiah for whom they have waited so long.

J. The Beast (Rev. 13:4; 17:8-11).

As the Beast or "Eighth Head," wounded unto death and revived, he shall be able to furnish a most important link in his chain of assumptions to Messiahship—a counterfeit resurrection. The name "Eight" is an essential one to him, it signifies life after death. And as Christ "died for our sins, and rose again for our justification," so in some mysterious and phenomenal manner this false Christ is predicted to simulate the resurrection of the true Christ.

K. The Wicked (One) (Isa. 11:4; II Thes. 2:8).

This presents him as the exponent and personification of wickedness.

(2) His Personality.

The opinion has prevailed that the titles mentioned above pertain to a system of error rather than to a person. And the Papacy, as furnishing more astounding coincidences than any other institution of church or state, has quite generally been agreed upon as being the power, which in itself, fulfilled all the prophetic requirements relating to the Antichrist. But no representative of the Papal system, however high his assumptions, has ever claimed to be more than God's vicegerent upon earth. While Antichrist, as the man of sin, is to "exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God," "so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Hence the Papacy in this most essential feature has failed to answer this prediction. A series of contrasts have been recorded in the Scriptures which prove both the personality, and establish the identity of the Antichrist:

- A. The true Christ comes from above. He is the Lord from heaven (John 3:31). Antichrist is from beneath, a denizen of the pit (Rev. 11:7).
 - B. Jesus came, endorsed of the Father, with manifest seals of divine approval. Antichrist will come in his own name, bearing no credentials but his own presumptions (John 5:43; Dan. 11:37).
 - C. The Christ of God humbled Himself to the rank of a servant (Phil. 2:8). The Antichrist is to glorify and exalt himself above the heights of the clouds (II Thes. 2:4).
 - D. Jesus was despised and lightly esteemed (Isa. 53:3; Luke 23:18). Antichrist shall be the object of universal admiration (Rev. 13:3, 4).
 - E. Christ did the Father's will and glorified God on the earth (John 6:38; 17:4). Antichrist comes to do his own wicked will and blaspheme the name of God (Dan. 11:36, 37; Rev. 13:6).
 - F. God, by His Son Jesus Christ, wrought "miracles and wonders and signs" to manifest the truth concerning Him (Acts 2:22). Satan, through his instrument, Antichrist, shall also "with all power and signs and wonders" perform marvelous acts, but this he will do to delude and deceive the unfaithful and unwary (II Thes. 2:9, 10; Rev. 13:13, 14).
 - G. Christ is likened unto a good shepherd, who gives his life for the sheep (John 10:14, 15). Antichrist is the false, evil, or idol shepherd, who shall scatter and destroy the flock (Zech. 11:16, 17).
 - H. Jesus was called Wonderful, and Prince of Salem, which is peace (Isa. 9:6). His great opposer, who will be king of Babylon, which is confusion, shall also be the wonder of the whole world (Rev. 13:3; 17:8).
 - I. God is to exalt His Son and cause every knee to bow to Him, and every tongue to confess His Lordship (Phil. 2:9-11). Satan will exalt the Antichrist and compel all that dwell upon the earth to worship him (Isa. 14:14; Rev. 13:8).
 - J. The followers of the Lamb are to have His Father's name written in their foreheads (Rev. 14:1). The worshippers of Antichrist will wear a mark of allegiance—the brand of the beast forced upon them, constituting their only title to civil privileges (Rev. 13:16, 17).
 - K. The Bible testifies to the love, interest, and energy of a triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, in an established arrangement of relationship on behalf of lost sinners (John 3:16; 5:17; 14:26). So, also, is there a trio of evil ones. Satan set against the Most High; Antichrist arrayed against the Son; and the False Prophet in opposition to the divine Spirit (Rev. 13).
- (3) His Origin and Development.

The rise, progress and downfall of the Man of Sin are events which belong to the future. The Antichrist is to be the last representative of Gentile power in the earth. In the development of the Little Horn out from among the others (Dan. 8), we have revealed the origin of Anti-christ. By comparing the activities of the Little Horn with the deeds predicted of the Man of Sin in the New Testament, the identity of the two is established beyond question. He is to be Jehovah's last and most cruel instrument of judicial punishment upon the guilty nation of Israel. The history of the Antichrist is definitely connected with Babylon and Jerusalem. The former, it would seem, is to be the center of his commercial activities; the latter, the seat of his ecclesiastic operations. For it is plain, that in imitation of the Lord Jesus, God's King-Priest, he shall unite under his own hand, the civil and sacerdotal authority of the world. In the fifth chapter of Zechariah, we get the description of an ephah, heavy with wickedness, and no doubt symbolizing the commerce of nations, transported into the land of Shinar, the site of Babel or Babylon. The seventeenth of Revelation depicts the woeful ruin of this same Babylon, grown commercially famous under the reign of the Beast; while Second Thessalonians, second chapter, unmistakably connects the ecclesiastic prominence of the Lawless One with the sanctuary in Jerusalem. Out of the seething cauldron of lawlessness which is rapidly developing, the Man of Sin will some day arise. He is to arise and flourish after the Jews are returned to their own land and their ancient ritual established.

The future origin and development of the Antichrist may be summarized as follows:

- A. He is to be the world's last Gentile king; the antitype of Nebuchadnezzar's great image.
- B. He is to reign after the old Roman Empire is divided under ten rulers, which has not yet occurred (Dan. 7:24; Rev. 17:12).
- C. He shall appear in connection with Babylon revived, and Jerusalem repopled.
- D. He shall come when the sanctuary at Jerusalem and its ritual, are in some measure restored.
- E. He shall be revealed only when God begins to deal with the Jews nationally in the land.
- F. He shall flourish after the Church is caught away, and the restraining power now holding him back shall release him.
- G. He is to resist Jesus, the Prince of princes, and be miraculously overthrown by the personal presence of the Lord Himself.

(4) His Work.

Scripture has grouped the deeds of Antichrist under six acts of distinct prominence.

- A. Antichrist shall attract attention as a plausible, conservative, and pacific leader. Appearing as the Little Horn, which indicates the political yet restricted character of his origin elsewhere denominated the beginning of a "vile person," his first act in his official role as Jewish foe will be to enter Palestine, the "pleasant land;" and by means of military support, persuasion, munificent proposals and professions of kinship, win the confidence of the Jews, who will be establishing themselves in goodly numbers in their own land (Dan. 8:9; 11:21, 24, 41). See also Rev. 13:4

B. He will next appear as the instigator and prominent party in a notable covenant, which he and the Jewish people shall confirm together. By his magnanimous bearing, pretensions of amity and promises of restoring ancient privileges, he shall lure them into the unhallowed league (Dan. 8:25; 9:27; 11:22, 23).

C. In three and a half years he will astonish his beholders by throwing off the garb of meekness, and suddenly appearing in his true character as "Man of Sin," "Lawless One" and "Son of Perdition." This covenant so deceitfully made will be as fraudulently broken (Dan. 9:27).

D. He shall then proceed to promptly manifest himself as a merciless and universal oppressor. The leopard king, whose graceful facinations had so long riveted the admiring gaze of his charmed prey, springs at last to grip as a bear, to rend as a lion, and to devour as a dragon. The daily sacrifice shall be taken away; the Jews shall be scattered and spoiled; the holy covenant between Jehovah and the fathers in reference to the land shall be abhorred and set aside; and Israel brought into a bondage so degrading, that to it the bitterness of Egypt would be as honey in the mouth (Dan. 8:11-13; 11:31).

Others beside the Chosen People will fall under his crushing supremacy. Times and laws shall be changed. None will be able to buy and sell the necessities of life except through the circulating medium of the mark of the beast. This the Jews will especially resist, as they were forbidden by law to "print any marks upon them" (Lev. 19:28).

Satan will at last find a man willing to accept the offer of dominion the Son of God refused (Luke 4:5-7); and through him the arch-demon shall rule the whole prophetic world. While the East is to be the peculiar center of his activity, there is little doubt but that distant dominions outside the limit of the old Roman Empire shall feel the influence of the reign of the Man of Sin (Rev. 13:4).

E. His next tremendous move will be to declare himself God. Not satisfied with universal power, he will aspire to universal adoration also. With miracles, signs and lying wonders will this false worship be secured and enforced. An abominable idol, the image of the Beast, shall be set up; the command, on penalty of death, shall go forth for all to bow down to it; and the fiery trials of the three Hebrew captives will be re-enacted (II Thes. 2:9, 10; Rev. 13:15).

F. Antichrist's final act will be to stand up against Christ, the Prince of princes. This last move will be a fatal one to him, and bring his career to a close. This will be taken up in connection with Antichrist's end.

(5) His End and Doom.

The downfall of the Antichrist involves events more momentous than any that have transpired on the earth. The passage of the Red Sea, the miracle of the manna, the dividing of the Jordan, and the conquest of Jericho are transactions whose luster must grow dim before the incomparable marvel of the divine visitation upon the Antichrist. The end of the Man of Sin marks an era of sublime interest to all believers. It shall be the day of our triumphant manifestation, as sons of God, and the jubilee of all creation. Scripture has solemnly recorded the end of various august evil personages who have from time to time set themselves up in rebellion against God, and in defiance of His laws. But to no sinful dweller on the earth save that Man called "the Wicked One" has been appointed the terrible distinction of being consumed by the brightness of the personal appearance of the Lord Jesus Himself. Such shall be his exalted doom; an end that shall suitably climax his ignoble origin, his surprising popularity, and his unexampled blasphemy. In the following Scriptures the manner of Antichrist's overthrow is indicated: Isa. 10:17; 11:4; 14:18, 19; Dan. 7:11; 8:25; 11:45; II Thes. 2:8; Rev. 19:20; Isa. 30:33; Rev. 20:10.

6. With Reference to Satan.

The Second Coming of Jesus Christ in its relation to Satan will mark the beginning of his final overthrow. At this time he will be bound and cast into the abyss, there to be imprisoned for the thousand year period of Christ's millennial reign. The particular object of this binding and imprisonment of Satan is not so much for his due punishment, as for the temporary restraint and prevention of his deception of men. It is stated to be that, "he should not lead astray the nations any more until the thousand years be accomplished" (Rev. 20:1-4). At the end of the thousand years he shall be liberated for a brief period at which time he shall go out to lead astray the nations which are in the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together into war, of whom the number is as the sand of the sea.

NOTE—The devil is loosed and He who looses him is, of course, the same who bound him, and sealed him in the prison of the abyss. God uses even the wickedest of beings and overrules the worst depravity, to His own good and gracious ends. He allows Satan liberty, and denies him liberty, and gives him liberty again, not because the devil or the devil's malice is necessary to Him, but to show His power to bring good out of evil, to make even the worst of creatures praise Him, and to turn their very wickedness to the furtherance of the purposes they would fain defeat. It seems like a great pity, after the world has rested for a thousand years, that this arch-enemy of its peace should again be let loose upon it. But there seems to be some sort of necessity for it. The statement to John was, that "he must be loosed a little time" (Rev. 20:3). Some interest of righteousness and moral government renders it proper that he should be allowed this last limited freedom. If for nothing else, it is not unimportant that he should have this opportunity to prove how little an imprisonment for a thousand years has served to change him, or reform his malignity. Even the devil seems to be granted this final trial to make a better record for himself if so minded. But neither judgment nor mercy has the least effect. He is, and remains to the last, the same depraved and wicked being, and employs even the little time of freedom before he is cast into perdition in tempting, seducing, and deceiving the happy and peaceful world. Perhaps, too, it was necessary for the millennial nations to be taught that, even after having been so far redeemed as to live a thousand years in submission and obedience, they still are unable to stand without the special help and grace of Almighty God. At any rate, this brief period of Satan's last freedom proves that he is still Satan, and that man is still prone to err, after a thousand years of bonds and imprisonment for the one, and a thousand years experience of the next thing to Paradise for the other; the devil being just as eager to tempt and deceive, and man just as liable to be tempted and deceived.

Swift judgment from God falls upon those who allow themselves to be led astray by the devil and are identified with him in this final insurrection, for we read that "fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them" (Rev. 20:9).

Satan is "cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever" (Rev. 20:10).

7. With Reference to the Millennial Kingdom.

(1) Millennium defined.

The Millennium, or the Kingdom age, is that era in the future history of the world when the Lord Jesus shall receive from God the rule and government of the earth. This era is to last one thousand years. No less than six times in the first seven verses of Rev. 20, we find the expression "the thousand years." It is this that gives rise to the name "Millennium," which comes from two words "mille" which means thousand, and "annus" or "annum" which means year or years. They are to be understood as defining the duration of Christ's earthly reign. While it is true that Rev. 20 is the only Scripture which specifically mentions the thousand years, yet there are many passages, both in the Old and New Testaments, that set forth the character and describe the blessing of that age which is to come.

(2) Descriptive Titles of the Millennium.

The Millennium is referred to in the Scriptures under various titles, each of which contributes its own light to our understanding of its scope and character.

A. The Regeneration (Matt. 19:28).

This title views the earthward character of the coming age. The earth is to be born again, as it were. This planet, which for six thousand years has groaned beneath its burden of sorrow, shall be rejuvenated. For sixty centuries it has been but a giant graveyard, but then it shall be endued with new life, so much so that even the desert place shall be made to rejoice and the wilderness blossom as the rose. The force and aptness of this title also appears in that as every birth is preceded by travail, so will it be with the ushering in of the coming age. It, too, shall be brought about by sharp travail. Indeed, this very term is used by Christ when speaking of the tribulation period which shall immediately precede the Millennium. The literal rendering of the Greek in Matt. 24:8 is, "All these are the beginning of the birth pangs." Hence the appropriateness of styling the age which issues forth from the travail pangs of the Tribulation, the "Regeneration."

B. The Last Day (John 6:40).

This title views the Millennium in its dispensational relationship. It will be the closing Day of this earth's Week. It will, so far as this earth is concerned, be the antitypical fulfillment of the Sabbath. It will be the time when creation shall at last rest from protracted groaning. A hint of this was given at the beginning, when God after six days' labor rested from all the works of His hands. Viewing the seven days of that first week in the light of the inspired Word "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day" (II Pet. 3:8), we gather that earth's history is to be completed in seven thousand years. Six thousand years will have passed since the time when the first Adam made his appearance upon earth, until the time when the last Adam appears upon earth in power and glory to reign in righteousness for a thousand years. This thousand years' reign will be earth's "Last Day."

C. Times of Refreshing (Acts 3:16).

This title describes the blessedness of the coming age. The Greek word here rendered "refreshing" is "anapsu," and signifies "cooling." It tells of the blessed reviving which shall be wrought in and on God's handiwork. It reveals a contrast to the preceding ages. It suggests the new life and fertility which follows a bountiful shower after a long drought. It intimates the beneficent results which will succeed the removal of Satan from the principdom of this world, and the established rule of the Lord of Glory in his stead. It will be not only a time of refreshing for the earth itself, but for Israel, for the nations, and even for God Himself.

D. Times of the Restitution of All Things (Acts 3:21).

This title views the results which will be brought about in the coming age. It is the restitution only of those "things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." That which is to be restored in the Millennium to a condition of fertility and blessedness approximating to the Edenic state is the earth. Israel is to be restored to the place of God's favor as His peculiar and covenant people. The duration of human life is to be restored to that which equals and surpasses the longevity of the patriarchs before the flood. The animal creation will be restored to the state which it had before the effects of the curse were visited upon it. The sun and moon shall be restored probably to their pristine glory, for in the age to come their light is to be increased seven-fold.

E. The Dispensation of the Fulness of Times (Eph. 1:10).

This title marks the relation of the coming age to God. It reveals the connection between that age and the ages which have preceded it. It tells how the Millennium is the goal toward which the other ages have moved. It points to the completion of the purpose of God concerning the earth in the present dispensational order. The force of this expression may be gathered from the similar one in Gal. 4:4,

"When the fulness of time was come God sent forth His Son." "The fulness of times" signifies ripeness of opportunity and consummation of need. The first advent of Christ and the proclamation of His gospel introduced a new era, but it also marked the climax of the old. The world was prepared through long processes for this advent and proclamation. From Eden to Bethlehem the centuries were preparing for the advent of Immanuel. As it was in connection with the first advent so it is concerning the second. Just as there was a definite and unmistakable movement in all history, making ready for the dispensation of grace, so is there a similar one going on now, making ready the world for the dispensation of glory. Just as the world's urgent need was fully demonstrated before the Saviour appeared, so shall it be ere He comes back as the Prince of Peace to take the government upon His shoulders.

F. The Day of Christ (Phil. 1:6).

This title calls attention to the exaltation and glory of the King Himself. The interval of our Lord's absence from the earth is known as "Man's Day" (I Cor. 4:3). But "Man's Day" is not to last forever. God has defined its limit, and has decreed that it should be followed by the "Day of Christ." Then shall the Holy One of God come into His own. Then shall His glory be displayed and His authority be universally owned, and His enemies be made His footstool. Then shall He reign as King of Kings and Lord of Lords (Zech. 14:9).

G. The Kingdom of Christ (Rev. 11:15).

This title has reference to the personal dominion and majesty of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. Long before the incarnation, God made known through His prophets that His Son should be the Head of a Kingdom, not a spiritual and heavenly kingdom, but a literal and earthly one (Jer. 23:5; Dan. 7:14; Rev. 11:15, R. V.). The kingdom over which Christ shall reign is that which God "prepared before the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34). It is known as the "Kingdom of Heaven" (Matt. 16:28); the "Kingdom of God" (Luke 19:11); the "kingdom of David" (Mark 11:10).

(3) Characteristics of the Millennium.

The Millennium, or the Kingdom reign of one thousand years, is characterized as the long expected day of Messiah, the day of righteousness and peace, when Jerusalem, rebuilt and adorned, will be the throne of Jehovah and the center of universal law and rule, worship and blessing. It is the time of God's publicly expressed delight in Christ—God's answer to the thirty and three years' life of suffering and reproach of His first advent. In it we witness the grand display of God's purposes and counsels respecting Christ and the Church, Israel and the earth.

The characteristics of the Millennial age have been outlined as follows:

A. There is to be a seven-fold manifestation of Christ.

- a. He will be manifested as Man, at Jerusalem, where He was crucified. From Jerusalem He ascended, and it is to Jerusalem He will return. The place of His humiliation will be the place of His exaltation: Acts 1:11; Zech. 12:10-12; 11:10; 8:3; Ezek. 43:7; 48:35; Joel 3:21; Zeph. 3:15; 14:4.
- b. He will be manifested as the Son of Abraham, the inheritor of the land of Palestine. He is "the Seed" concerning Whom the promise was made to Abraham; "I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee . . . all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession:" Gen. 17:8; Gal. 3:16 cf. Matt. 1:1.
- c. He will be manifested as the Son of David, heir of the throne: Matt. 1:1; Luke 1:32, 33; Isa. 9:7.
- d. He will be manifested as Son of Man, executing judgment: John 5:27.
- e. He will be manifested as King: King of righteousness (Isa. 32:1); King of Israel (John 12:13); King of Kings (Rev. 19:16); King over all the earth (Zech. 14:9 cf. Phil. 2:10).
- f. He will be manifested as the mighty God and God the Son (Isa. 9:6; Psa. 134:3; Heb. 1:8, 10). The Lord Who will be in Zion at that time is the Lord Jesus Christ; He is here affirmed to be the Maker of heaven and earth, and therefore, indeed, the mighty God.
- g. He will be manifested as the supreme Teacher of all the earth: Isa. 2:3; Zech. 8:22.

B. There is to be a seven-fold blessing and glory for Israel.

- a. Israel and Judah are to be restored to the land and reunited under their King: Ezek. 37:15-28; 28:25, 26; 36:24; Amos 9:14, 15; Jer. 31:10.
- b. Jerusalem will be rebuilt unto the Lord: Jer. 31:38, 39; Jer. 30:17-22; Joel 3:17-21; Zeph. 3:14-20.
- c. The Temple will be rebuilt in splendor: Ezek. 40 to 48.
- d. The twelve Apostles will rule over the reunited twelve tribes: Luke 22:30; Isa. 32:1.
- e. Restored and converted Israel will be the missionaries to the nations: Isa. 51:6.
- f. Israel will be the chamberlains of the King: Zech. 8:23 cf. John 12:20-23.
- g. Israel will be head over all the nations of the earth: Deut. 28:13; Isa. 60:12; 14:1, 2; Psa. 45:16.

C. Seven-fold description of the Millennial reign.

- a. Christ will rule the nations with a rod of iron and by means of His judgments the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness: Isa. 26:9; Psa. 101:5-8; 58:11.

b. The Church will rule and reign with Christ. The Millennium will have its two distinct spheres of blessing, the one above, the other on the earth (Matt. 13:41-43). Corporately, the Church will remain in and rule from the heavens. Individually, Christians may reign on the earth. The twelve apostles will be assigned to the rulership of the twelve tribes of Israel. Rulership in the kingdom is to be a matter of reward: II Tim. 2:12; Heb. 2:5-10; Col. 3:4; Rev. 3:21; 5:1-10; I Cor. 6:2; Dan. 7:18, 27; Matt. 19:28; Luke 19:15-19; 22:30.

c. There will be universal peace during the thousand years: Isa. 2:4; 11:5-9 cf. Isa. 65:25.

d. The earth will enjoy her pristine fruitfulness and freedom from the curse: Psa. 67:4-6; Isa. 35:1; 51:3; Ezek. 34:26; 36:30; 47:9-12; Amos 9:13; Rom. 8:19-23.

e. Human life will be prolonged (Isa. 33:24; 65:20). It will depend not on grace and an over-watching Providence, but on righteousness; a man will live as long as he is righteous, and no longer; death will be judgment for disobedience (Ps. 72:8, 9; Micah 5:8-15; Ps. 149:7). Satan being bound, and the regenerating Lord enthroned in power, there will be no excuse for sin.

f. The heavens will be opened to the view of earth and intercourse between them will be established. Apparently this was the condition at the beginning. They were opened to Enoch, Elijah, Jesus and Paul. They were wondrously opened to Jacob (Gen. 28:10-12). They will be opened by the coming of the Son of God (Rev. 19:11). It is through those opened heavens that the city of God will be seen shining in all its celestial splendor (Rev. 21:9-27). That this description has to do with the millennial period is shown by the fact that there are nations on the earth, nations that walk in the light of this city. There are no nations during the eternal state. See Hosea 2:21; John 1:51.

g. The earth will be free from the polluting presence and power of Satan: Rev. 20:1-3.

(4) The Manner of its Inception.

The Millennium is to be brought about by nothing else and nothing less than the personal return of Jesus Christ to this earth. Nothing short of divine intervention can bring to an end the present age wherein abound sin, selfishness and suffering. It was the personal intervention of God which began the Edenic dispensation. So was it with the Mosaic dispensation and the present gospel age. And it will be the personal intervention of God which shall bring in the kingdom dispensation. Nothing less than the personal return and presence of the Lord in manifested power and glory can remove Satan from this scene, can lift the curse from the groaning creation, can set up the kingdom of God on earth, and can establish a reign of righteousness, peace and blessing. There is no kingdom where there is no king, and there can be no Millennium without Christ, no reign of peace without the presence of the Prince of Peace.

C. The Resurrection of the Dead.

While the Scriptures describe the impartation of new life to the soul in regeneration as a spiritual resurrection (John 5:25; Rom. 6:4, 5; Eph. 2:1, 5, 6; 5:14) they also declare that, at the Second Coming of Christ there shall be a resurrection of the body, and reunion of the body with the soul from which, during the intermediate state, it has been separated. Both the just and the unjust shall have a resurrection. To the just, it will be a resurrection unto life, and the body shall be a body like Christ's, fitted for the uses of the sanctified spirit. To the unjust, it will be a resurrection unto condemnation or judgment. Analogy would seem to indicate that, here also, the outward form will fitly represent the inward state of the soul, being corrupt and degraded as the soul which inhabits it.

I The Resurrection a Scriptural Doctrine.

Upon the subject of the resurrection, our positive information is derived wholly from the Word of God.

1. It is Taught in the Old Testament:

- (1) By positive statement: Job. 19:25-27; Psalms 16:9-11; 17:15; Daniel 12:2.
- (2) By plain figure or symbol: Genesis 22:5; Romans 4:19, 20; Hebrews 11:19; Numbers 17:6-10.
- (3) By predictive prophecy: Isaiah 26:19; Hosea 13:14.
- (4) By practical demonstration: I Kings 17:17-24; II Kings 4:32-35; 13:20, 21.

2. It is Taught in the New Testament:

- (1) By positive statement: John 5:21; Acts 26:9, 22, 23; 23:6-8; I Peter 1:3.
- (2) By predictive prophecy: John 5:28, 29; 6:39, 40, 44, 54; Luke 14:13, 14; 20:35, 36; I Corinthians 15; I Thessalonians 4:14-16; Philippians 3:11; Revelation 20:4-6, 13-15.
- (3) By practical demonstration: Lazarus: John 11:41-44; Jairus' daughter: Luke 8:41, 42, 49-56; the widow's son: Luke 7:12-15; Our Lord: Matthew 28; John 20; departed saints: Matthew 27:52, 53.

II The Manner of the Resurrection.

1. It will be ■ Literal and Bodily Resurrection: I Corinthians 15:22; Revelation 20:12; II Corinthians 5:10; Job 19:25-27; Psalm 16:9; John 5:28, 29 cf. John 5:25.

NOTE—In the passage in I Cor. 15:22, the apostle is speaking of physical death in Adam, and also of physical resurrection in Christ. The passages in Revelation and Second Corinthians show the necessity of the raising of the body in order that judgment and reward may be administered according to things done in the body. The fruition of the hope, both of Job and the Psalmist, requires a bodily resurrection. Acts 24:15 speaks of a resurrection of the just and the unjust—this cannot refer to spiritual resurrection surely, if so, then in the future state every justified man would have two spirits—the spirit he has here and the spirit he would receive at the resurrection.

2. It will be Universal Resurrection.

The dead will not all be raised at the same time nor to the same destiny but all the dead will be raised—the resurrection will be universal: John 5:28, 29; I Cor. 4:16, 17; 15:22; Revelation 20:12-14.

3. It will be a Two-fold Resurrection.

(1) The Resurrection of the Just.

The resurrection of the believing dead will take place in a period of time called "the last day" (John 6:39, 40, 44). The term "day" as here used does not mean a period of twenty-four hours, but a day period, such as the "day of salvation," "the day of judgment," "the day of the Lord." See II Peter 3:8. The believer's resurrection will be the second event in God's resurrection program, of which Christ's resurrection was the first; but it will be the first event of the series of those included in Christ's Second Coming: Luke 14:14; I Cor. 15:22, 23; I Thes. 4:16. See also John 5:28, 29; Rev. 20:4-6.

(2) The Resurrection of the Unjust.

The resurrection of the unbelieving dead will take place subsequent to the thousand year reign of Christ upon the earth, and just preceding the Great White Throne judgment: Rev. 20:5, 12-14; Acts 24:14, 15; Dan. 12:2; John 5:28, 29.

NOTE—The announcement of two resurrections, separated in time by a thousand years, and distinguished in character as unto immortality and unto mortality, seems to be one of the very plainest in all Scripture: "And I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus and for the Word of God: and such as worshipped not the beast, neither his image, and received not his mark upon their forehead and upon their hand: and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. The rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years should be finished. This is the first resurrection" (Rev. 20:4, 5, R. V.). Here is first a vision of disembodied souls, then of their resurrection. This resurrection must mean a literal rising from the dead; for two words employed in the passage put the matter beyond dispute: "They lived"—ezason—is language which is never, in the New Testament, applied to the soul disembodied, but to man in his complete condition of body, soul and spirit united; and "This is the first resurrection"—anastasis—defines this living to be bodily resurrection, since the word in the New Testament, with perhaps a single exception, always signifies corporeal resurrection. So that the phraseology employed seems to render it impossible to apply the vision either to the condition of disembodied existence or to the quickening of spiritual regeneration.

The question may be asked, How is it that this startling doctrine of two distinct resurrections, with a Millennium between, is not found till the last book of the Bible is reached? It has been found although not defined. In Daniel, there is a condensed prophecy of the great tribulation which, by our Lord's interpretation in the twenty-fourth of Matthew, is expanded into an age-long period of Jewish trial; so in John's Gospel (5:28), there is a miniature prediction of the resurrection: "For the hour is coming in which all that are in their tombs shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done ill, unto the resurrection of judgment,"—which hour in the Apocalypse of John, is interpreted as covering the entire millennial era in its fulfillment. This is according to the common method of prophecy.

Holding that the last presentation of the Resurrection—this in the Apocalypse—is the completest and most comprehensive, the important question is whether the statements of the doctrine in other parts of Scripture harmonize with this. Not only do they harmonize, but in several instances they find their only solution in it.

In the first place, attention is to be called to a class of passages which are marked by this peculiarity, that they seem to represent the resurrection of believers as selective and special. It is plain, if the scheme based upon Revelation 20 is correct, that the subjects of the first resurrection are called out from the general mass of the dead; or, in other words, that a prior resurrection would involve the idea of an elect resurrection. And this conception would seem to explain at once our Lord's allusion (Luke 20:35) to those who shall be "accounted worthy to obtain that age, and the resurrection out from the dead"—ek nekron. If there be a first resurrection, at the opening of the millennial age, in which only the righteous share, the significance of this text is apparent at once. Even more striking are the words of Paul (Phil. 3:11): "I count all things but loss . . . if by any means I might attain unto the out resurrection from the dead—ek nekron. The words are very strong in the Greek. They cannot possibly refer to anything else than a selective resurrection, a separation and quickening to life out from among the dead.

Especially would this seem to be so when, in addition to the very emphatic language describing the resurrection itself, there is the expression of intense desire and vehement striving to attain it. Why should one strive to attain what is inevitable, as Paul's resurrection must have appeared to be had he held that all men will be raised together? And what could our Lord's words—"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that age and the resurrection from the dead"—mean on any other view than that presented; the view, namely, that there is a prior age in which the rising of the saints will take place, and a distinct, and special, and privileged dispensation of bodily redemption which belongs to them? And this phase of the argument is set in very strong light by the additional fact that this expression, "resurrection from the dead,"—anastasis ek nekron—is so invariable throughout the New Testament in its application to Christ as well as to His saints. There is only one instance where the other phrase—anastasis nekron—the general expression for "the resurrection of the dead,"—is applied to our Lord, and that seems to be on account of a special requirement of the context (Rom. 1:4). He, coming forth from the dead, and opening the doors for all believers to come forth with Him in the resurrection unto life, is described just as they are, as rising—ek nekron. Hence, very significantly, it is said in the Acts that the apostles "preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead," not the resurrection of the dead (4:2). This selective conception is admitted even by some who oppose the doctrine of two resurrections. Olshausen even goes so far as to declare that "the phrase would be inexplicable if it were not derived from the idea that out of the mass of the dead some would rise first." Distinct traces of the idea of a selective and precedent resurrection of the just are found in the Old Testament. The passage in Daniel 12:2, translated in the Authorized Version, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt," is undoubtedly a Messianic prediction concerning the time of the end. Tregelles translates the passage as follows, giving not only the authority of his own accurate scholarship for the rendering, but that of two eminent rabbis, Saadia Haggion and Eben Ezra: "And many from among the sleepers of the dust of the earth shall awake, these—that awake—shall be unto everlasting life; but those—the rest of the sleepers who do not awake at this time—shall be unto shame and everlasting contempt." Here again, is presented the idea of the first resurrection with its selective and separate character, and its distinct issue in life.

There are two texts which have been cited as distinctly and unquestionably contradicting the theory of two resurrections. The first is in II Timothy 4:1, reading, according to the Authorized Version: "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." It is said that we have here the living and the dead, without distinction or separation, brought together at the coming of Christ. All that need be said in regard to this passage is that, according to the Revised Version the words read: "And by His appearing and kingdom." This change not only relieves the passage of any seeming contradiction of this doctrine, but makes it give emphatic support to it.

The other text is John 5:28, R. V. "Marvel not at this; for the hour cometh in which all that are in the tombs shall hear His voice and shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done ill, unto the resurrection of judgment." This, it is said, teaches a simultaneous resurrection, since it declares that, in the hour that is coming, both classes will come forth to their respective rewards. To this it is to be replied, in the first place, that the word "hour" (hora), as here employed, refers to an era or lengthened period of time. This is not an unusual meaning of the word as appears by referring to such examples as I John 2:18; Rom. 13:11; and, what is more directly to the point, our Lord's use of the term in this sense in the twenty-fifth verse of this same chapter: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." This refers, doubtless, to that spiritual quickening, under the preaching of the gospel, which began with the time of Christ, and is going on today. Therefore the hour referred to must have continued for at least nearly two thousand years. This is the time for the quickening of the living who are dead in sins. It is evidently synchronous with I John 2:18,—"It is the last time" (hora),—and covers the whole gospel dispensation. Next follows, in our Lord's discourse, a statement in regard to the time involved relative to the two classes referred to as "the dead." The two periods are set in contrast. The first—the hour of spiritual quickening—has already begun. Hence, it is described thus: "The hour is coming and now is." The second had not yet begun; hence only the words, "The hour is coming," are used with reference to it. Is it not fair to presume that the second era, like the first, is a prolonged one? That this is the case cannot be reasonably denied. This seems to be the order: at the appearing of the Lord from heaven, the age will open in which all that are in their graves will come forth, but some at the beginning and some at the end of the age. If it be said that it is a strained and unnatural construction to bring events which are so far apart into such immediate juxtaposition, with no intimation of any time lying between them, it may be replied, that it is not at all uncommon in prophecy. Who, for instance, in reading Isaiah's words concerning the Messiah,—“To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord and the day of vengeance of our God,”—would have imagined that in this single sentence two grand and distinct eras were brought together and spoken of in a breath,—the era of grace and the era of judgment? But the Lord, by His penetrating exegesis, cleft the passage asunder, as He expounded it in the synagogue, and, breaking off in the middle of the sentence,—“to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.”—He closed the book and sat down saying: “this day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears” (Luke 4:21). In this prophetic passage (John 5:28, 29) there is a similar conjoining of distinct and widely separated acts of the same resurrection drama.

This impression is confirmed by the manner in which this passage, with its expressions “resurrection of life” and “resurrection of judgment,” corresponds to the passage in Revelation, these being common points in the two texts,—the latter seeming to fill out in detail what is here presented in outline. There is, perhaps, no doctrine of Scripture the references to which are at once so fragmentary and so complementary of each other as this doctrine of two resurrections. Except in the passage in the Revelation, it is nowhere presented in a formal and complete statement. But what is very striking is, that almost every scattered allusion to it fits into this passage at some point, confirming its literal significance, and being confirmed by it. For example: it is commonly accepted that John 5:28, 29, and Luke 20:36, have reference to the literal rising of the body from the grave. Apply these texts to Revelation 20:1-6 and they perfectly fit it: “They that have done good unto the resurrection of life;” “They lived and reigned with Christ: this is the first resurrection;” “They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead neither marry nor are joined in marriage, neither can they die any more” (Luke 20:35, 36); “On such the second death hath no power” (Rev. 20:6). “They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain the resurrection from the dead” (Luke 20:35); “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection;” “They that have done evil to the resurrection of judgment” (John 5:29); “And they were judged every man according to their works” (Rev. 20:13). These passages unmistakably refer to the same event, the literal resurrection of the body. In putting all these texts together, the one supplies what another omits; the gospels and epistles teaching the privilege and preeminence attaching to the believer's resurrection, and the Apocalypse teaching its priority and separateness in time.

III Objections to the Doctrine of a Literal Resurrection.

1. The Theological Objection.

The theological objection to the doctrine of the resurrection is that such a doctrine rests upon a literalizing of metaphorical language, and has no sufficient support in Scripture. To this we reply:

- (1) That, though the phrase “resurrection of the body” does not occur in the New Testament, the passages which describe the event indicate a physical, as distinguished from a spiritual, change (John 5:28, 29; Phil. 3:21; I Thes. 4:13-17). The phrase “spiritual body” (I Cor. 15:44) is a contradiction in terms, if it be understood as signifying “a body which is simple spirit.” It can only be interpreted as meaning a material organism, perfectly adapted to be the outward expression and vehicle of a purified soul. The purely spiritual interpretation is, moreover, expressly excluded by the apostolic denial that “the resurrection is past already” (II Tim. 2:18), and by the fact that there is a resurrection of the unjust, as well as of the just (Acts 24:15).
- (2) That the redemption of Christ is declared to include the body as well as the soul (Rom. 8:23; I Cor. 6:13-20). The indwelling of the Holy Spirit has put such honor upon the frail mortal tenement which he has made His temple, that, it is evident, God would not permit even this wholly to perish (Rom. 8:11).

(3) That the nature of Christ's resurrection, as literal and physical, determines the nature of the resurrection in the case of believers (Luke 24:36; John 20:27). As, in the case of Christ, the same body that was laid in the tomb was raised again, although possessed of new and surprising powers, so the Scriptures intimate, not simply that the saints shall have bodies, but that these bodies shall be in some proper sense an outgrowth or transformation of the very bodies that slept in the dust (Dan. 12:2; I Cor. 15:53, 54). The denial of the resurrection of the body, in the case of believers, leads to a denial of the reality of Christ's resurrection (I Cor. 15:13).

(4) That the accompanying events, as the Second Coming and the judgment, since they are themselves literal, imply that the resurrection is also literal.

2. The Scientific Objection.

The scientific objection is three-fold:

(1) The resurrection of the particles which compose the body at death is impossible since they enter into new combinations, and not infrequently become parts of other bodies which the doctrine holds to be raised at the same time.

Reply: The Scripture not only does not compel us to hold, but it distinctly denies, that all the particles which exist in the body at death are present in the resurrection body (I Cor. 15:37). The Scripture seems only to indicate a certain physical connection between the new and the old, although the nature of this connection is not revealed (I Cor. 15:37, 38).

NOTE—All chasing through the universe to get the identical material atoms and molecules, to constitute a proper identity, is not only a philosophical absurdity but also a serious misrepresentation of St. Paul. Pollock's "Course of Time" represented the day of resurrection as one on which the limbs that had been torn asunder on earth hurtled through the air to join one another once more. The amputated arm that has been buried in China must traverse thousands of miles to meet the body of its former owner as it rose from the place of its burial in England.

There are certain serious difficulties attending this ultra-literalistic view of the resurrection. The bodies of the dead fertilized the field of Waterloo. The wheat grown there has been ground into flour and made into bread, and eaten by thousands of living men. Particles of one human body have become incorporated with the bodies of many others.

"The Avon to the Severn runs,
The Severn to the sea,
And Wycliffe's dust shall spread abroad
Wide as the waters be."

Through the clouds and the rain, particles of Wycliffe's body may have entered into the water which other men have drunk from their wells and fountains. In these various ways, the same particles might in the course of time enter into the constitution of a hundred living men. How can this one particle, at the resurrection, be in a hundred places at the same time? Like the woman who had seven husbands, the same matter may belong in succession to many bodies, for they all had it. The cannibal and his victim cannot both possess the same body at the resurrection.

The Providence Journal had an article entitled: "Who Ate Roger Williams?" When his remains were exhumed it was found that one large root of an apple tree followed the spine, divided at the thighs and turned up at his toes. More than one person had eaten its apples. This root may be seen today in the cabinet of Brown University.

These considerations have led some, like Origen, to call the doctrine of the literal resurrection of the flesh "the foolishness of beggarly minds," and to say that the resurrection may be only "the gathering around the spirit of new materials and the vitalizing them into a new body by the spirit's God given power." But this view seems as great an extreme as that from which it was a reaction (complete material identity between the body of the grave and the resurrection body). It gives up all idea of unity between the new and the old. If the body of an individual were this instant annihilated, and if then, an hour hence, God should create a second body, precisely like the present body, it could not be called the same as the present body, even though it were animated by the same informing soul, and that soul had maintained an uninterrupted existence between the time of the annihilation of the first body and the creation of the second. So, if the body laid in the tomb were wholly dissipated among the elements, and God created at the end of the age a wholly new body, it would be impossible for Paul to say: "This corruptible must put on incorruption (I Cor. 15:53). In short, it is clearly intimated in Scripture that there is a physical connection between the old body of the grave and the new body of the resurrection. Paul himself gives us an illustration which shows that his view was midway between the two extremes: "That which thou sowest, thou sowest not the body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain" (I Cor. 15:37). On the one hand, the wheat that springs up does not contain the precise particles that were in the seed. On the other hand, there has been a continuous physical connection between the seed sown and the ripened grain at the harvest. If the seed had been annihilated and then ripe grain created, we could not speak of identity between the two. But, because there has been a constant flux, the old particles pressed out by new, and these new in their turn succeeded by others that take their places, we can say: "The wheat has come up." We bury grain in order to increase it. The resurrection body will be the same with the body laid away in the earth, in the same sense as the living stalk of grain is identical with the seed from which it germinated. "This mortal must put on immortality"—not the immortal spirit put on an immortal body, but the mortal body put on immortality, the corruptible body put on incorruption (I Cor. 15:53).

To use another illustration: "My body is the same body that it was ten years ago, although physiologists declare that every particle of the body is changed, not simply once in seven years, but once in a single year. Life is preserved only by the constant throwing off of dead matter and the introduction of the new. There is indeed a unity of consciousness and personality, without which I should not be able to say at intervals of years: "This body is the same one I have always had; this body is mine." But a physical connection between the old and the new is also necessary.

There are two things requisite to make our future bodies one with the bodies we now inhabit: first, that the same formative principle be at work in them; and secondly, that there be some sort of physical connection between the body that now is and the body that shall be. And this physical connection the Scripture most plainly and positively teaches shall exist (Job 19:25-27; Phil. 3:21).

It is not so much, however, a question of material identity as it is of glorified individuality and personal and characteristic identity in which we are the most deeply interested.

- (2) A resurrection body, having such a remote physical connection with the present body, cannot be recognized by the inhabiting soul or by other witnessing spirits as the same with that which was laid in the grave.

Reply: Bodily identity does not consist in absolute sameness of particles during the whole history of the body, but in the organizing force, which, even in the flux and displacement of physical particles makes the old the basis of the new, and binds both together in the unity of a single consciousness. In our recognition of friends, moreover, we are not wholly dependent even in this world, upon our perception of bodily form; and we have reason to believe that in the future state there may be methods of communication far more direct and intuitive than those with which we are familiar here. On the occasion of the transfiguration there is no mention of information given to Peter as to the names of the celestial visitants; it would seem that in his state of exalted sensibility, he at once knew them (Matt. 17:3, 4).

- (3) A material organism can only be regarded as a hindrance to the free activity of the spirit, and that the assumption of such an organism by the soul, which, during the intermediate state, had been separated from the body, would indicate a decline in dignity and power rather than of progress.

Reply: We cannot estimate the powers and capacities of matter, when brought by God into complete subjection to the spirit. The bodies of the saints may be more ethereal than the air, and capable of swifter motion than the light, and yet be material in their substance. That the soul clothed with its spiritual body will have more exalted powers and enjoy a more complete felicity than would be possible while it maintained a purely spiritual existence is evident from the fact that Paul represents the culmination of the soul's blessedness as occurring, not at death, but at the resurrection of the body (Rom. 8:23; II Cor. 5:4; Phil. 3:11). A. J. Gordon declared, "Now the body bears the spirit, a slow chariot whose wheels are often disabled and whose swiftest motion is but labored and tardy. Then the spirit will bear the body, carrying it as on wings of thought whithersoever it will."

IV Characteristics of the Resurrection Body.

1. Characteristics of the Resurrection Body of the Believer.

(1) Negatively Considered.

Because of some confusion of thought and teaching, it seems necessary to make some negative statements concerning the body which the believer will receive in the resurrection.

- A. The resurrection body will not be produced by an indestructible germ that is in the body of this life. Resurrection is not resuscitation of unconscious vitality.
- B. The resurrection body will not be produced by natural force which belongs to the body of this life. Resurrection is not reanimation through resident forces within the body of the grave.
- C. The resurrection body will not be the result of any natural law, any habitual divine volition, such as brings the buds and blossoms in spring. Resurrection is not revivification of dormant life.

NOTE—Nature has no perfect analogies by which the doctrine of the resurrection of the body may be proved. As D. L. Moody said: "The analogies of nature do not furnish a proof of the resurrection. They only afford illustration of things that are about as hard to explain." The illustration from the seed in the earth is no proof. True, it appears to die, and out of the apparent death comes forth the beautiful life, but every farmer knows it does not die; that its very heart and life survives and appropriates the decay of the outer shell.

"The disgusting grub" spinning its own shroud, and falling into apparent death to bring forth in spring a beautiful butterfly, is no proof of the resurrection, for there is never an hour from the time when that grub goes into winter quarters to the day when he comes forth a winged thing of wonderful beauty, that the scientist cannot easily discover life, either latent or active in the cocoon.

The forest standing silent through the cold season, having cast its leaves and lost its sap, is still not dead, but sleeping, until the May sun shall rouse it up to activity again, leafing, flowering, fruiting; but, in the death of the body, there is not, so far as we know, so far as any thoughtful man has claimed, one principle of life put into the grave. The perfect dissolution that follows is evidence enough of that truth; and so all analogies from nature fail and she joins reason in saying with reference to our buried loved ones, "there is no hope." Revelation is our one and only spokesman on this subject. It dares to set itself up to speak where reason is silent or to oppose reason if she enters into the argument. Nature's agnosticism does not silence revelation's assertions that "all that are in their graves shall come forth."

D. The resurrection body is not an ethereal body which before or at the time of death was within the physical body, as the shell is within the husk of the nut. Resurrection is not the spiritization of the soul or personality.

E. The resurrection body will not necessarily be a reconstructed body, having material identity with the body that descended in the grave. Resurrection is not the reconstruction of the old body by use of the identical material substance of which the body at death is composed.

NOTE—This may seem to be a departure from the pattern furnished us in Christ's resurrection which was not only the pledge but the pattern of ours, for His resurrection body was substantially the same material body which was laid in the grave. And yet we do not know what changes may have been wrought in it through the process of resurrection. But, however that may be, we must remember that the condition of Christ's body during the period that it was in the grave was different from the condition of all other bodies of similar experience. For of His body alone has it been said, "Neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption" (Psa. 16:10).

F. It will not be a flesh and blood body. "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (I Cor. 15:50). It may be that the reason for this is suggested in the following sentence: "Neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." The blood is, without doubt, the vitalizing principle of these mortal bodies: "For the life of the flesh is in the blood" (Lev. 17:11), and blood is subject to corruption. It will therefore be absent from our resurrection bodies, and will be replaced by a principle of vitalization that is not subject to corruption.

(2) Positively Considered.

The resurrection completes the believer's redemption. It is his physical salvation. It is redemption from all physical limitations and imperfections which are man's inheritance through sin. It brings him into possession of the perfected humanity which Christ has made him heir to through His sacrificial and atoning work. The positive aspects of the believer's resurrection body are summarized as follows:

A. It will be a God-given body—a body which God in His sovereignty will bestow upon us, not bound by the laws of this world, but made by the direct action of God, but so made as to be conditioned by the body of the grave: "But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him" (I Cor. 15:38 cf. II Cor. 5:1-4).

B. It will be "this body of our humiliation fashioned anew." Hence it will be the same body as to personal identity, though not as to complete material identity (Phil. 3:21, R. V.).

- C. It will not be pure spirit, but will have flesh and bones, like the resurrection body of our Lord, who said to His disciples after His resurrection, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have" (Luke 24:39) for the body which He had then and still has is the pattern of the body we are to receive in resurrection (Phil. 3:21, R. V. cf. I John 3:2).
- D. It will be immortal and incorruptible (I Cor. 15:52-54; Luke 20:35, 36). Immortality may be predicated of the body alone; of the body of the believer alone; of the resurrection body of the believer alone. Immortality is never predicated of the soul in the Scriptures. It is not synonymous with eternal life nor endless existence. Believers possess eternal life in the present, but not immortality. All possess endless existence, but only those who have part in the "resurrection unto life" will be made immortal—not subject to death.
- The resurrection body will be incorruptible, in that it will not be subject to the inroads of disease or decay. It will be exempt and immune from all bacteria and germs of disease.
- E. It will be a powerful body, not subject to weakness and weariness, nor to the limitations of our present physical bodies, but be possessed of powers and capacities of which we have had no experience in our present form of existence, "It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power" (I Cor. 15:43 cf. John 20:19; Rev. 7:15).
- F. It will be a heavenly or celestial body, i.e., a body adapted to the environment of the heavenlies and suited to heavenly uses and purposes. "The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (I Cor. 15:47-49 cf. I Cor. 15:40).
- G. It will be a shining, luminous, or glorious body. This is shown by the direct statement: "It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory (I Cor. 15:43). It is shown also by those passages which teach that our resurrection body is to be like our Lord's. We have an illustration of the luminous shining appearance of His resurrection body in the transfiguration record, where it is said, "and after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light" (Matt. 17:1, 2. See also Luke 9:29). This harmonizes with the statements in Phil. 3:21 and I John 3:2.

It is also intimated in such passages as Matt. 13:43, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father;" Dan. 12:3, "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

Apparently, our resurrection bodies will be possessed with a glory light, similar to that in which God is said to envelop Himself: "Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment" (Psa. 104:2). It has been conjectured that the bodies of Adam and Eve were so clothed before they sinned, and that these garments of light served as a covering which departed after the fall, so that "they knew that they were naked" (Gen. 3:7). This glorious style of clothing will come into fashion again in the resurrection.

H. The resurrection bodies will have variety, differing one from another. "There is one glory of the sun, another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead" (I Cor. 15:41, 42). We will not be characterized by monotony or absolute uniformity in appearance like the inmates of an asylum or some other charitable institution, but there will be that which will differentiate us the one from the other, and so save the new life from the commonplace and the humdrum.

2. Characteristics of the Resurrection Body of the Unbeliever.

The Scriptures state the fact and purpose of the resurrection of unbelievers but do not describe their bodies. It is strongly implied, however, that they will be mortal, corruptible bodies (Rev. 20:12, 13).

The Scriptures are strangely silent on the subject of the resurrection of the unbeliever's body. The purpose and result of their resurrection, namely, judgment and punishment, is about all that is given. There is detailed information revealed unto us by the Spirit concerning "things that God hath prepared for them that love Him" (I Cor. 2:9, 10), but only the cold facts are given concerning the judgment and punishment of the wicked. In the genealogy of Genesis 5 no age is given to those not in the chosen line. In the story of Luke 16 no name is given to the godless rich man.

D. The Judgments.

The Scriptures represent all punishment of individual transgressors and all manifestations of God's vindictory justice in the history of men and nations as acts or processes of judgment. They also, however, intimate that these temporal judgments are only partial and imperfect, and that they are, therefore, to culminate in a final and complete vindication of God's righteousness. This will be accomplished by making known to the universe the characters of all men, by assigning to them corresponding destinies and distributing to them suitable rewards.

I The Necessity of Judgment.

There are those who object to the doctrine of future and final judgment. They assume that the Biblical pictures of the last day are designed merely to impress the imagination and to set forth vividly a principle which is to be recognized as in continual operation throughout history. "The world's history is the world's judgment," says Schiller who belongs to this school of interpreters.

In reply it may be said that the principle of judgment is in constant operation. In a real sense moral law works itself out inevitably. But its actions are not after the manner of physical law. Human freedom and sin have greatly complicated the mechanism of the moral order. Matter, force and motion are changeless and remorseless in their results under given conditions. This is because natural law rules in all forms of matter. But in a realm of free personalities, no such mechanical certitude is possible. Human wills are centers of new initiative. As prone to evil, they render the present social order liable to many complexities and forms of injustice. Only another and divine will can readjust these disturbed and abnormal relations. A future judgment is the Christian expression of this fact. It is the final and equitable requirement demanded by the rule and reign of God in all of its aspects.

1. It Fulfills the Final Requirement of Conscience.

The conscience is the witness in man to the immanent moral law of the universe. Its verdicts in ordinary conduct imply the final verdicts of Him who planted the moral nature in us. "Conscience," it has been said, "is the moral glimpse which the soul obtains of the future." Wrong doing is accompanied by a forward look upon a fiery judgment (Heb. 10:27). The moral law, written in our nature, is a copy of the eternal moral law written in God's nature. This law, immanent in us, implies a future reckoning, a judgment day, when that which is true, though not apparent concerning men, may become manifestly true and receive full and final justice.

2. It Fulfills the Final Requirement of History.

That which works in the individual conscience, works in the corporate conscience of the race. The crimes of nations stand out as clearly in the light of conscience as do the crimes of individuals. The wrongs which the innocent suffer, when might rules in the place of right, fill the pages of a large part of human history. Posthumous influence is a large part of a man's moral power. His work is not done when he dies. His deeds live after him, and will live in history until the new order which follows judgment shall arise. Heredity and solidarity are forces which must be reckoned with in the final awards to individuals. So also freedom and corporate choice of low ideals and immoral standards must be applied as principles of judgment in dealing with men in social groups. The slow progress of the moral ideal in history points to a culmination which shall crystallize the contending forces of good and evil and bring about their final separation. This is clear to ordinary human experience, but more so to Christian experience. The redeemed saints in Revelation are represented as calling for the vengeance of God upon evil doers. Perhaps this moral demand enters character in its perfected form as it does not now. We are commanded to forgive and to avenge not ourselves. There is no contradiction here, but the perfected saints share more completely the divine reaction against sin. All morally vigorous natures partake of this quality in large measure. A contemplation of history as a whole deepens it in every one. A climax which shall bring about a suitable adjustment seems most appropriate.

3. It Fulfills the Final Requirement of the Theistic View of the World.

If God is a person; if He is in moral relations with men, and men are moral personalities in relations with God; if, in short, we live in a universe of freedom and obligation, God's vindication of His ways to men calls for a final judgment of affairs. He cannot consistently ignore the demand of the human soul for some sort of understanding of the moral universe. Pantheism reduces us to the level of things. We are passing phenomena, like plants and flowers, the product of an eternal substance, or force, without moral dignity. But theism puts us on a higher pedestal. We reflect the eternal intelligence and moral cravings. If we recognize the purposiveness of the moral sense in us, in Christian experience and in history, and in the theistic view of the world, we look forward to a higher solution. Teleology implies judgment. We may illustrate by the principles of progress and unity in literature and art generally. The Kingdom of God is like a great drama. It moves forward to a climax. All the apparently loose ends of the development are slowly combined and gathered together. The unity of the whole is seen only in the final outcome. Without the climax the drama is meaningless. It is mere motion without progress.

In God's kingdom, judgment operates constantly as an immanent principle in the on going of history. It expresses itself in a gradual process. But it also expresses itself in signal events and great climaxes. In both aspects, judgment is in close agreement with the nature of man and the course of history in other respects: the slow processes followed by the sudden revolution; the beginning, the ascent toward a goal, the climax and then a new beginning, a new ascent, a new climax. These are familiar processes in history. The final judgment is the Biblical expression of this principle in the moral kingdom.

Future and final judgment is made necessary, therefore, in order that the principle of judgment, which is in constant operation, may have its full and complete expression as demanded by conscience, human history, and the Christian conception of God and man in moral relations with each other.

II The Purpose of Judgment.

The purpose of future judgment is not the discovery of character and conduct, but their manifestation, discrimination and reward. As Paul expresses it: "We must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ; that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad" (II Cor. 5:10).

So also in Rom. 2:5, 6, men are said to treasure up for themselves wrath in the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his works. They are to give account of "every idle word" that they shall speak (Matt. 12:36). Again, "There is nothing covered up, that shall not be revealed; and hid that shall not be known" (Luke 12:2).

NOTE—To judge means, literally, to discriminate, and from this follows the idea to separate. In judgment God discriminates between the righteous and the unrighteous and separates them from each other. But this is simply to uncover or make manifest what previously existed in principle. Deeds done in the body are taken as the criterion of judgment because deeds declare character. The inward state is, of course, presupposed. No secret thing is hidden from God. The union of men by faith with Christ will be a cardinal fact which will be recognized. The great "deed," the true "work of God," is that men believe on Christ (John 6:29). No other deed means so much as this. It is the mother deed, the root principle, of all good deeds. All the good deeds which God approves are in principle the offspring of this. But this is not a meritorious good work which buys salvation. It is the gift of God's grace. And all the deeds which spring from it arise from the same grace. Christians, then, are not saved by works, but by grace through faith. They are rewarded according to the use they make of the grace as manifest in deeds.

III The Fact of Divine Judgment.

1. As Revealed in the Scriptures.

- (1) It is taught in the Old Testament: Psa. 9:7, 8; 96:13.

A time of reckoning and judgment for the world, by God, is clearly taught in the Old Testament Scriptures.

- (2) It is taught in the New Testament: Acts 17:31; Heb. 9:27.

Man is appointed unto judgment, according to the New Testament, just as certainly as he is to death, and the resurrection of Jesus Christ is God's assurance of that fact.

2. As Corroborated by Human Experience.

In the nature of man, there are corroborations of this Scriptural doctrine which are evidences of, and preparations for, the future judgment.

- (1) The law of memory, by which the soul preserves the records of its acts, both good and evil (Luke 16:25).

NOTE—Memory will embrace all the events of the past life; will embrace them all at the same moment; will embrace them continuously and continually. Memory is a process of self-registry. As every business house keeps a copy of all letters sent or orders issued, so every man retains in memory the record of his sins. The mind is a palimpsest; though the original writing has been erased, the ink has penetrated the whole thickness of the parchment, and God's chemistry is able to revive it. Subjective memory is the retention of all ideas, however superficially they may have been impressed upon the objective mind, and it admits of no variation in different individuals. Recollection is the power of recalling ideas to the mind. This varies greatly. Subjective memory has been called "mental latency."

- (2) The law of conscience, by which men involuntarily anticipate punishment for their own sins: Rom. 2:15, 16; Heb. 10:27.

NOTE—Goethe said that his writings taken together constituted a great confession. Wordsworth wrote,

"For, like a plague will memory break out,
And, in the blank and solitude of things,
Upon his spirit, with a fever's strength,
Will conscience prey."

A man, who afterward became a preacher, was converted in Whitefield's time by a vision of the judgment, in which he saw all men gathered before the throne, and each one coming up to the book of God's law, tearing open his heart before it, as one would tear open the bosom of his shirt, comparing his heart with the things written in the book, and, according as they agreed or disagreed with that standard, either passing triumphant to the company of the blessed, or going with despair to the company of the damned. No word was spoken; the Judge sat silent; the judgment was one of self-revelation and self-condemnation.

- (3) The law of character, by which every thought and deed makes indelible impress upon the moral nature: Heb. 3:8, 15; Eph. 4:19; Prov. 23:7.

NOTE—In England, churchmen claimed that they could distinguish a dissenter by his walk—not a bad sign by which to know a man. God needs only to hold up our characters to show what our lives have been. Sin leaves its scars upon the soul, as truly as lust and hatred leave their marks upon the body. Thomas Edison says: "In a few years the world will be just like one big ear; it will be unsafe to speak in a house till one has examined the walls and the furniture for concealed phonographs." But the world even now is "one big ear," and we ourselves in our characters are writing the books of judgment. Brooks, "Foundations of Zoology," says, "Every part of the material universe contains a permanent record of every change that has taken place therein, and there is also no limit to the power of minds like ours to read and interpret the record."

Draper, "Conflict of Science and Religion": "If on a cold polished metal, as a new razor, any object, such as a wafer, be laid, and the metal breathed upon, and when the moisture has had time to disappear, the wafer be thrown off, though now the most critical inspection of the polished surface can discern no trace of any form, if we breathe once more upon it, a spectral image of the wafer comes plainly into view; and this may be done again and again. Nay, more; if the polished metal be carefully placed aside where nothing can injure its surface and be kept so for many months, on breathing upon it again, the shadowy form emerges. A shadow never falls upon a wall without leaving thereon a permanent trace, a trace which might be made visible by resorting to proper processes. Upon the walls of our most private apartments, where we think the eye of intrusion is altogether shut out, and our retirement can never be profaned, there exists the vestiges of all our acts."

Single acts and words are to be brought into the judgment only as indications of the moral condition of the soul (Matt. 12:36; Luke 12:2, 8, 9). This manifestation of all hearts will vindicate not only God's past dealings, but His determinations of future destinies.

IV The Executor of Justice or The Judge of All Future Judgment.

1. God will be the Judge: Psalms 9:7, 8; 96:13; Romans 1:32; 2:2, 3, 5, 6; 14:14.

Future judgment will be executed by God; by Whom all are held responsible, to Whom also they will be held accountable.

2. God in Christ will be the Judge: Romans 14:10-12; 2:16; Acts 17:31; John 5:22, 23, 27; II Corinthians 5:10; Acts 10:42.

The texts which speak of God as judging the world are to be understood as referring to God the Son. Christ's own declaration was: "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22). No appeal can be made from the Son to the Father. His judgment is final.

The fitness of Christ to be the final Judge of men grows out of His two-fold relation to God and to man. He is the revelation of God to man. God is now dealing with men in and through Christ. Men come unto God through Him. He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life for men. What God requires of men and what God is willing to bestow upon men, comes into the clearest expression through Christ. The invisible, eternal God thus adopts a historical mode of manifesting Himself, His grace, His holiness, His power. It is fitting, therefore, that the culmination of His plan should find expression in the person of His Son.

This fitness of Christ is further seen in the fact that He is "a Son of Man" as John describes (John 5:27), who says that He is thus qualified as a judge of men.

The perfect human nature of Christ, united as it is to the divine, ensures all that is needful in true judgment. As man, Christ knows men (John 2:24, 25). He was tested in all points like as men are, sin apart (Heb. 4:15). He thus possessed knowledge and sympathy which are essential to equitable and just decisions regarding men.

3. The Saints will share in the Execution of Judgment: I Cor. 6:2, 3; Psa. 149:9; Rom. 2:26, 27; 3:31.

Judgment upon kings, nobles and peoples is an honor which God shall confer upon His saints. Instead of standing in the dock as criminals, they shall sit on the bench with Christ as judges.

V The Character and Course of Divine Judgment.

The multiplicity of judgments may surprise those who have not given this matter careful consideration. There have been many judgments, or divine visitations upon sin and sinners in the past, such as: the primeval earth (Gen. 1-2); Adam, Eve and the serpent (Gen. 3); Cain (Gen. 4); the antediluvians (Gen. 7, 8); the race (Gen. 11); Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19); Egypt, her king and military power (Ex. 8 to 15); Israel at Sinai (Ex. 32), and in the wilderness (Num. 14); the seven nations of Canaan (Deut. 7); Judah by the Chaldeans (II Kings 25), and subsequently by the Romans (Luke 21); Israel by the Assyrians (II Kings 17); Babylon (Jer. 51); Nineveh (Nahum 3).

The last and greatest of the past judgments to be mentioned is that of the cross.

There are also judgments that are transpiring at the present time, such as God's providential and disciplinary judgments upon men and nations.

As the rays of the prophetic lamp fall on the yet unwritten pages of history, judgments numerous as those already past, unsparing and final in character, are revealed to our gaze. The future is crowded with distinctive acts of judgment upon individuals and peoples, of which the following furnish examples: the Jew in the coming tribulation (Mark 13); Israel in the wilderness (Ezek. 20:33-38); the nations to whom the Gospel of the kingdom is to be preached (Matt. 25:31-46); Russia, Persia, and other allied north-eastern powers politically hostile to Israel (Ezek. 38 and 39); Philistines, Moab, Amalek, and other tribes and peoples settled within the borders of, or contiguous to, Palestine (Psa. 83); Edom and the heathen (Obadiah and Isa. 63:1-6); nations and armies of the west gathered in mad opposition to God and to the Lamb (Rev. 19:11-21); Christ-rejecting Christendom (II Thes. 1 and 2); the beast and the false prophet (Rev. 19:20); the wicked dead (Rev. 20:11-15). From all the judgments of the past, the present and the future, we select the following outstanding ones:

1. The Judgment of the Cross.

This stands out and alone from all before and all to come. The past and future, heaven and hell, light and darkness, good and evil, love and enmity, center and circle around that wondrous meeting place—the cross—and by it all is eternally fixed and settled.

- (1) Here Satan was judged, and his power over the believer was potentially and provisionally broken: John 16:11; Rev. 12:11; John 12:31.
- (2) Here sin in the flesh or the nature of sin was judged, and judicially put to death in the death of Christ—the new Federal Head: Rom. 8:3, 4, R. V.; Gal. 2:20, R. V.; Rom. 5:13, 16-21; 6:1-4.
- (3) Here the believer's sins were judged and punished in the person of his substitute Saviour: Rom. 9:25-28, R. V.; Gal. 3:13; I Peter 2:24; I Peter 3:18.

NOTE—All the divine judgment for the believer was focussed upon Christ (Isa. 63:6), and He fully and forever satisfied divine justice on his behalf. There will be no future judgment of the believer for his sins as crimes, for they have already been judged at the cross. No judgment and no condemnation are the emphatic declarations of Scripture (John 5:24, R. V.; Rom. 8:1, R. V.). The weakest and feeblest believers are as free and immune from divine judgment for sin as Christ Himself. It can no more overtake them than it can reach Him. For us and Him it is forever passed. For "As He is (beyond judgment) so are we in this world" (I John 4:17). We will be manifested before the judgment seat, or bema, of Christ for rewards, but not judged to reveal guilt or innocence, or to determine destiny. No judgment! No condemnation! No separation! is the plain teaching of the New Testament concerning the regenerate believer in Christ.

2. The Present Judgment of the Believer's Self-life.

There is and should be a present judgment upon the believer's self-life. There should be a self-examination by the believer himself, in which sin is discerned, judged, confessed and put away by the blood of Christ in the power of the Holy Spirit: (I Cor. 11:26-32; I John 1:5-7). There must be a continual judgment of self—self-discipline going on in the believer's life—otherwise it will call for divine discipline, corrective judgments and chastening. God deals with believers not as subjects of a king, or as criminals answerable to a judge, but as sons under the control and discipline of a father: Heb. 12:5-11; I Tim. 1:20.

3. The Manifestation of the Believer before the Judgment Seat of Christ and the Judgment of the Believer's Works.

The principal passage which treats of this judgment is II Cor. 5:10, where the statement is made "we must all appear (be made manifest) before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done whether it be good or bad" (worthless). The pronoun "we" occurs twenty-six times in the chapter, and in every instance it means the believer, and the epistle is addressed to the "church" and "saints" at Corinth, so the judgment here spoken of is for believers only.

The time of this judgment is when the Lord comes (I Cor. 4:5), and the place is "in the air" (I Thes. 4:17) and before the judgment seat of Christ.

It will not be a judgment in the sense of a trial to see whether the judged are innocent (saved) or guilty (lost), for it is a judgment of the saved only. It will be like the judge's stand at a fair or race track where rewards are distributed to the successful contestants. Paul describes such a scene in I Cor. 9:24-27.

(1) The Basis of the Examination and Manifestation before the Judgment Seat of Christ.

The manifestation before the judgment seat of Christ will be of "every man's work." The examination will determine "what sort it is," "whether it be good or bad," i.e., whether it is "gold, silver, precious stones" or "wood, hay and stubble."

NOTE—This is a judgment not for destiny, but for adjustment, for reward or loss, according to our works, for position in the kingdom, every man according as his works shall be. There will be a vast amount of healthy work transacted at the judgment seat of Christ. The statement that "the bride hath made herself ready" (Rev. 19:7) surely intimates that she has been at the judgment seat before the glorious blaze of the searching, revealing light of the presence of Christ; now, all having come out, she can happily take her place at the side of her heavenly Bridegroom. The mistakes of time will there be rectified; wrong judgments reversed, misunderstandings corrected; ungenerous attempts to impute falsehood or evil where such do not exist, exposed; and, in short, persons, ways, words, motives and acts shall then appear in their true light and character. It will be a clearing up moment; so that the church and every member of the redeemed company shall enter into the enjoyment of eternal blessing in the perfect knowledge that all has been fully exposed between the soul and Christ. Then in the eternal rest of God, no clouds shall ever darken our sky; no unsettled question ever arise to dim the joy; no lurking suspicion ever cross the soul. Every difficulty and question between believers and God, and between brother and brother shall then be righteously adjusted.

It is suggested that the gold, silver and precious stones—nondestructible materials—which stand the fire test symbolize the true motive, objective and energy which should characterize the believer's life and service. Gold, the symbol of the glory of God, suggests the motive (I Cor. 10:21). Silver, which symbolizes the redemption of Christ, suggests the objective, i.e., the carrying out of His redemptive purposes (Ex. 30:11-16; Col. 3:17; I Cor. 2:2; Gal. 6:14; I Peter 1:18, 19). Precious stones is thought to symbolize the power of the Holy Spirit productive of the Christian graces (Zech. 4:6; Gal. 5:22, 23; Titus 2:10; I Peter 3:3-5; 4:11). These materials which stand the fire test are contrasted with wood, hay and stubble, destructible materials which suggest that which is of the earth, earthy; of earthly production, for earthly uses and ends, with earthly motives—worldly, fleshly and selfish, if not devilish.

(2) The Results of the Manifestation before the Judgment Seat of Christ.

A. Some will receive rewards: I Cor. 3:10-15.

The reward of the believer will be in proportion to the faithfulness of his service for God in using the talents with which God has endowed him. The rewards, therefore, will differ according to the faithfulness or unfaithfulness of our life and service. Faith in Jesus Christ saves the believer, but his position in the future life, together with the measure of his rewards will depend upon his works. Thus it comes to pass that a man may be saved, "so as by fire," i.e., saved because of his faith but his life's work lost.

NOTE—The rewards which are to be distributed are referred to as crowns, of which there are five.

A. The crown of life for faithfulness under trial—martyr's crown, for those who live the martyr's life and die the martyr's death—(James 1:12; Rev. 2:10).

B. The crown of glory—the under-shepherd's crown, for feeding and caring for those entrusted to his care (I Peter 5:4 cf. Heb. 2:9; John 17:22).

- C. The crown of righteousness—the triumphant soldier's, the successful runner's, the faithful steward's crown (II Tim. 4:7, 8).
- D. The crown of rejoicing—the soul winner's crown (I Thes. 2:19; Dan. 12:1-3).
- E. The incorruptible crown—the crown of self-mastery (I Cor. 9:25-27).

B. Some will suffer loss: II John 8; Rev. 2:11; I Cor. 3:15; I John 2:28.

C. All will possess rare privileges and positions of royal honor: I Cor. 2:9, 10; Rev. 3:4, 5; Matt. 10:32; Luke 12:8. They shall be arrayed in white garments with their names inscribed in the book of life, and be confessed before the Father and the holy angels.

4. The Judgment of the Living Nations.

There is to be a future judgment of the nations at the revelation of Jesus Christ based upon their treatment of Christ's brethren according to the flesh (a Jewish remnant) who are to be the messengers of the gospel of the kingdom during the interval between the rapture and the revelation (Matt. 25:31-46). The judgment will take place at the beginning of the Millennium. The place, in general, will be the earth; in particular, "the valley of Jehoshaphat" at the base of the Mount of Olives (Joel 3:3-16; Zech. 14:1-9).

NOTE—The popular and prevalent idea of the judgment described in Matt. 25 is that of a grand assize in which all those who shall be alive at that time together with the resurrected dead of all ages shall be judged to determine their destiny. The following unanswerable objections may be raised against this interpretation.

- A. There is no reference whatever to any resurrection.
- B. Those who are judged are called "the nations." This word is never employed in Scripture concerning those who have died.
- C. There are three classes of persons here instead of two which a general judgment would necessitate. There are the sheep, goats, and brethren, the latter term referring to the Jews, the Lord's kindred after the flesh. The church does not appear here because it has already been raised and translated; the saints have been judged for their works and rewarded accordingly.
- D. The great objection, however, is the ground on which the nations who are called "the sheep" receive their reward (Matt. 25:34-40). "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Right or wrong treatment of Christ's brethren (Jewish missionaries of the gospel of the kingdom) will be the determining factor of admission into, or exclusion from, the millennial kingdom. But the ground on which the Christian inherits the kingdom of Heaven is the regenerating grace of God and the atoning death of Jesus Christ (John 3:3-5; Titus 3:5; Rev. 7:9-17).

5. The Judgment of Israel.

There is a future judgment predicted for restored Israel preparatory to the reestablishment of the Davidic kingdom (Psa. 50:1-7; Isa. 1:2, 24-26; Ezek. 20:30-34). These passages are prophecies of the future judgment upon Israel, regathered from all nations into the old wilderness of their former wanderings. The issue of this judgment determines who shall enter the land for kingdom blessing. It takes place probably at the end of the great tribulation.

6. The Judgment of the Fallen Angels.

The fallen angels are reserved for judgment which shall take place during the period known as "the great day"—the day of the Lord (Jude 6; II Peter 2:4 cf. Isa. 2:9-22). As the final judgment upon Satan occurs after the thousand years and preceding the final judgment of the wicked (Rev. 20:10), it is reasonable to conclude that the other fallen angels will be judged with him at that time and also share his doom. Saints will be associated with Christ in this judgment (I Cor. 6:3).

7. The Judgment of the Great White Throne.

There is a future and final judgment of the wicked which shall forever settle their destiny of eternal doom (Rev. 20:11-15). This is spoken of as the final judgment. It stands at the end of this present dispensational or age order (I Cor. 15:24). The Judge will be God the Son, unto Whom all judgment has been committed by the Father. The judged are the dead—those who did not have part in the first resurrection. The judgment will be based upon the things written in the books, and the final appeal will be to the book of life and to the names written therein. The issue will be the lake of fire for all those whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life.

E. The Final Destiny of the Righteous and of the Wicked.

I Of the Righteous:

The final and eternal state of the righteous is the fulness and perfection of holy life in communion with God and with sanctified spirits. There will be degrees of blessedness and honor, proportioned to the capacity and fidelity of each soul (Luke 19:17-19; I Cor. 3:13-15), yet each will receive as great measure of blessing and privilege as its capacity and capability make possible, and these will depend largely upon the improvement and use of God's gifts in the present life. This final state, once entered upon, will be changeless in kind and endless in duration (Rev. 3:12; 22:11).

1. They shall never die: John 8:51; 11:25, 26.

This does not mean that the believer shall not pass through the experience that we call death, but that in reality it is not death; at least, not in the sense in which it is death to the unbeliever. The word "see" in John 8:51 means that the believer shall not gaze at death protractedly, steadily, exhaustively. Death is not the objective of his gaze. The believer's outlook is that of life, not death. The death of the body is not to be reckoned as death any more than the life of the body, in the fuller sense, is to be reckoned as life (I Tim. 5:6). The believer is represented in Scripture as having passed out of the realm of death into the realm of life (John 5:24). His back is turned upon death; he faces and gazes upon life. The temporary separation of the soul and body does not even interrupt, much less impair, the soul's true life received from Jesus Christ.

2. Death for the believer is spoken of as sleep: Dan. 12:2; John 11:11-15; I Cor. 15:51; I Thes. 4:13, 14.

In the passage in I Thessalonians the contrast is sharply drawn between death and the experience through which the believer passes in the dissolution of his soul and body. Jesus "died"—He tasted the awfulness of death; the believer in Him "falls asleep." This does not mean that the soul is unconscious between the time of death and the resurrection. When the disciples did not understand the figurative language He used on the occasion when He had been notified of Lazarus' death, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth," He then told them plainly, "Lazarus is dead." What Jesus meant is that death is something like that which takes place when we go to sleep. The current of life does not cease, but continues to go on, and when we awake we feel better and stronger than before. There is a shutting out of all the scenes of the world and time. Just so is it in the case of the believer's death. Three ideas are contained in the word "sleep": continued existence—for the mind is active even though the body is still; repose—we lose our hold on and forget the things of the world; waking—we also think of sleep as followed by awakening. Sleep primarily, in this sense, applies to the body, although in respect to the soul there is a severing of physical consciousness and communication.

3. At death the believer goes to be with Christ: II Cor. 5:6-8; Phil. 1:23, 24.

The Bible seems to give but little explicit and detailed information concerning the character of our existence when "absent from the body" and "at home with the Lord," up to the time of the coming of the Lord and our being "clothed upon with our habitation which is from heaven" (II Cor. 5:2-4). It does say, however, that this state is "very far better" than our present state (Phil. 1:23). This leaves no room for purgatorial tortures, nor for a state of unconsciousness. It is evidently a state of conscious bliss, although not the highest state to which the believer shall attain. The interval between the death of the believer and his resurrection is characterized by conscious life in the presence of Christ.

4. Believers are to be identified with Christ in His millennial reign: II Tim. 2:12; Col. 3:4; Rev. 2:25-27.

The Millennium will have its two distinct spheres of blessing—the one above, the other on the earth. All who share in the blessedness of the "first resurrection"—the righteous dead from Adam—will reign with Christ over the earth, while the Jews and nations shall form subjects of the kingdom.

5. In the eternal state, the believer will enter into a new condition and abode of life: John 14:2; 17:24; Rom. 8:18; Heb. 11:10, 16; 13:14.

The abode will be a prepared place. This is Christ's own answer to the question, "Is heaven a place as well as a state?" His word should be sufficient to establish this, but the probability is also seen by the further fact that Christ's human body is essential to heaven ("That where I am there ye may be also"), and that this body requires place. It means, therefore, a new sphere of life and a new home for the saints. There will be a new heaven and a new earth; Paradise will be regained—new spiritual environment, new physical conditions. We will not be surrounded by the temptations and defects of this mortal life. In Rev. 21:1—22:5 we have a picture of the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, which will doubtless be the final and eternal abode of the people of God. The eternal state also involves a new condition of life for the redeemed. God's home is the future dwelling place of the believer (Rev. 21:3), thus the believer has unbroken fellowship with God. The things that belonged to the old order in a sinful universe have passed away: death, mourning, curse, tears, sorrow, night—all have gone. The things which belong to the new and redeemed order appear: the river of life, the tree of life, new service, new relationships, new light (Rev. 22:4).

II Of the Wicked:

The final disposition of the wicked has been the subject of dispute and cavil down through the ages, and is without doubt the most difficult doctrine with which the Scriptures deal. Various explanations are given for this. To some this doctrine is unwelcome because they feel themselves guilty and their own conscience assures them that unless they repent and turn to God, an awful doom awaits them. The thought of future punishment striking terror to peoples' hearts prejudices the minds of many against the Scriptural presentation of this truth. To others again, the thought of future anguish seems utterly incompatible with the fatherly love of God. Yet, it is acknowledged to be a remarkable fact that both Jesus and John, who more than any one else in the New Testament represent the trait of love in their lives and teaching, speak most of the future anguish of the wicked.

1. The Scriptures emphatically teach that eternal punishment is to be the final visitation of God upon the wicked.

The final state of the wicked is described under the figures of eternal fire (Matt. 25:41); outer darkness (Matt. 8:12); torment (Rev. 14:10, 11); eternal punishment (Matt. 25:46); wrath of God (Rom. 2:5; John 3:36); second death (Rev. 21:8); eternal destruction from the face of the Lord (II Thes. 1:9, R. V.); eternal sin (Mark 3:29). Summing up all, we may say that it is the loss of all good, whether physical or spiritual, the misery of an evil conscience, banished from God and from the society of the holy, and dwelling under God's positive curse forever. Here we are to remember, as in the case of the final state of the righteous, that the decisive and controlling element is not the outward, but the inward. Hell as a place is such in order that the outward state of the lost may correspond to the inward. The outward torments will be fit accompaniments of the inward state of the soul.

2. The future punishment of the wicked is not annihilation.

By virtue of its original creation in the image of God, the soul of man is inherently possessed of endless existence; neither for the righteous nor the wicked is death a cessation of being; on the contrary, the wicked enter at death upon a state of conscious suffering which the resurrection and the judgment only augment and render permanent. It is plain, moreover, that if annihilation took place at death, there could be no degrees in future punishment—a conclusion itself at variance with express statements of Scripture.

There are two forms of the annihilation theory which seem quite plausible to the natural mind, and which in recent times have found a large number of advocates; namely:

- (1) That the powers of the wicked are gradually weakened, as the natural result of sin, so that they finally cease to be. To this it is to be replied, first, that moral evil does not, in this present life, seem to be incompatible with a constant growth of the intellectual powers, at least in certain directions, and we have no reason to believe the fact to be different in the world to come; secondly, that if this theory were true, the greater the sin, the speedier would be the relief from punishment.

- (2) That there is for the wicked, certainly after death, and possibly between death and the judgment, a positive punishment proportioned to their deeds, but that this punishment issues in, or is followed by, annihilation. To this second form of the theory, it is to be replied, first, that upon this view, as upon any theory of annihilation, future punishment is a matter of grace as well as of justice—a notion for which Scripture affords no warrant; secondly, that Scripture not only gives no hint of the cessation of this punishment, but declares in the strongest terms its endlessness.
3. Punishment after death excludes new probation and ultimate restoration of the wicked. Some have maintained the ultimate restoration of all human beings by appeal to such passages as the following: Matt. 19:28; Acts 3:21; I Cor. 15:26; Eph. 1:9, 10; Phil. 2:10, 11; II Pet. 3:9, 13.
- (1) These passages are to be interpreted in the light of the plain positive statements of Scripture already cited. Thus interpreted, they foretell only the absolute triumph of the kingdom of God, and the subjection of all evil to Him.
- (2) A second probation is not needed to vindicate the justice of the love of God, since Christ, in the Holy Spirit, is already in this world present with every soul, quickening the conscience, giving to each man his opportunity, and making every decision between right and wrong a true probation. In choosing evil against their better judgment even the heathen unconsciously reject Christ. Infants and idiots, as they have not consciously sinned, are, as we may believe, saved at death by having Christ revealed to them and by the regenerating influence of His Spirit (Rom. 1:18-28; 2:6-16).
- (3) The advocates of universal restoration are commonly the most strenuous defenders of the inalienable freedom of the human will to make choices contrary to its past character and to all the motives which are or can be brought to bear upon it. As a matter of fact, we find in this world that men choose sin in spite of infinite motives to the contrary. Upon the theory of human freedom just mentioned, no motives which God can use will certainly accomplish the salvation of all moral creatures. The soul which resists Christ here may resist Him forever.
- (4) Upon the more correct view of the will which we have advocated, the case is more hopeless still. Upon this view, the sinful soul, in its very sinning, gives to itself a sinful bent of intellect, affection, and will; in other words, makes for itself a character, which, though it does not render necessary, yet does render certain, apart from divine grace, the continuance of sinful action. In itself it finds a self-formed motive to evil strong enough to prevail over all inducements to holiness which God sees it wise to bring to bear. It is in the next world, indeed, subject to suffering. But suffering has in itself no reforming power. Unless accompanied by special renewing influences of the Holy Spirit, it only hardens and embitters the soul. We have no

Scripture evidence that such influences of the Spirit are exerted, after death, upon the still impenitent; but abundant evidence, on the contrary, that the moral condition in which death finds men is their condition forever.

- (5) The declaration as to Judas, in Matt. 26:24, could not be true upon the hypothesis of a final restoration. If at any time, even after the lapse of ages, Judas be redeemed, his subsequent infinite duration of blessedness must outweigh all the finite suffering through which he has passed. The Scripture statement that "good were it for that man if he had not been born" must be regarded as a refutation of the theory of universal restoration.
4. Scripture declares this future punishment of the wicked to be eternal. It does this by its use of the terms "aion" and "aionios." Some, however, maintain that these terms do not necessarily imply eternal duration. To this may be replied:
 - (1) It must be conceded that these words do not etymologically necessitate the idea of eternity; and that, as expressing the idea of "age-long," they are sometimes used in a limited or rhetorical sense (II Tim. 1:9; Titus 1:2; Heb. 9:26).
 - (2) They do, however, express the longest possible duration of which the subject to which they are attributed is capable; so that, if the soul be endless being, its punishment must be without end (Gen. 49:26; 17:8, 13; Ex. 21:6; II Chron. 6:2).
 - (3) If, when used to describe the future punishment of the wicked, they do not declare the endlessness of that punishment, there are no words in the Greek language which could express that meaning.
 - (4) In the great majority of Scripture passages where they occur, they have unmistakably the signification "everlasting." They are used to express the eternal duration of God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit (Rom. 16:26; I Tim. 1:17; Heb. 9:14; Rev. 1:18); the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit with all true believers (John 14:17); and the endlessness of the future happiness of the saints (Matt. 19:29; John 6:54, 58; II Cor. 9:9).
 - (5) The fact that the same word is used in Matt. 25:46 to describe both the suffering of the wicked and the happiness of the righteous shows that the misery of the lost is eternal in the same sense as the life of God or the blessedness of the saints.
 - (6) Other descriptions of the condemnation and suffering of the lost, excluding, as they do, all hope of repentance or forgiveness, render it certain that "aion" and "aionios" in the passages referred to, describe a punishment that is without end (Matt. 12:31, 32; 25:10; Mark 3:29; 9:43, 48; Luke 3:17; 16:26; John 3:36).

- (7) While, therefore, we grant that we do not know the nature of eternity, or its relation to time, we maintain that the Scripture representations of future punishment forbid both the hypothesis of annihilation, and the hypothesis that suffering will end in restoration. Whatever eternity may be, the Scriptures render it certain that after death there is no forgiveness.
5. Everlasting punishment of the wicked is not inconsistent with God's justice, but is rather a revelation of that justice.
- (1) The object of penalty is neither reformatory nor deterrent, but simply vindictory; in other words, it primarily aims, not at the good of the offender, nor at the welfare of society, but at the vindication of law. Justice is not a form of benevolence, but is the expression and manifestation of God's holiness. Punishment, therefore, as the inevitable and constant reaction of that holiness against its moral opposite, cannot come to an end until guilt and sin come to an end.
- (2) Guilt or ill desert is endless. However long the sinner may be punished, he never ceases to be ill deserving. Justice, therefore, which gives to all according to their deserts, cannot cease to punish. Since the reason for punishment is endless, the punishment itself must be endless. Even past sins involve an endless guilt, to which endless punishment is simply the inevitable correlate.
- (3) Not only eternal guilt, but eternal sin demands eternal punishment. So long as moral creatures are opposed to God, they deserve punishment. Since we cannot measure the power of the depraved will to resist God, we cannot deny the possibility of endless sinning. Sin tends evermore to reproduce itself. The Scriptures speak of an "eternal sin" (Mark 3:29). But it is just in God to visit endless sinning with endless punishment. Sin, moreover, is not only an act, but also a condition or state of the soul; this state is impure and abnormal, involves misery; this misery, as appointed by God to vindicate law and holiness, is punishment; this punishment is the necessary manifestation of God's justice. Not the punishing, but the non-punishing would impugn His justice; or, if it is just to punish sin at all, it is just to punish it as long as it exists (Mark 3:29; Rev. 22:11).
- (4) The actual facts of human life and the tendencies of modern science show that this principle of retributive justice is inwrought into the elements and forces of the physical and moral universe. On the one hand, habit begets fixity of character, and in the spiritual world sinful acts, often repeated, produce a permanent state of sin, which the soul, unaided, cannot change. On the other hand, organism and environment are correlated to each other; and in the spiritual world, the selfish and impure find surroundings corresponding to their nature, while the surroundings react upon them and confirm their evil character. These principles, if they act in the next life as they do in this, will insure increasing and unending punishment (Gal. 6:7, 8; Rev. 22:11).

- (5) As there are degrees in human guilt, so future punishment may admit of degrees, and yet in all those degrees be infinite in duration. The Scriptures recognize such degrees in future punishment, while at the same time they declare it to be endless (Luke 12:47, 48; Rev. 20:12, 13).
- (6) We know the enormity of sin only by God's own declaration with regard to it, and by the sacrifice which He has made to redeem us from it. As committed against an infinite God, and as having in itself infinite possibilities of evil, it may itself be infinite, and may deserve infinite punishment. Hell, as well as the cross, indicates God's estimate of sin. See Ezek. 14:22.
6. The everlasting punishment of the wicked is not inconsistent with God's benevolence. It is maintained, however, by many who object to eternal retribution, that benevolence requires God not to inflict punishment upon His creatures except as a means of attaining some higher good. To this it may be replied:
- (1) God is not only benevolent but holy, and holiness is His ruling attribute. The vindication of God's holiness is the primary and sufficient object of punishment. This constitutes an end which justifies this means, i.e., the infliction of punishment.
- (2) In this life, God's justice does involve certain of His creatures in suffering which are of no advantage to the individuals who suffer; as in the case of penalties which do not reform, and of afflictions which only harden and embitter. If this be a fact here, it may be a fact hereafter.
- (3) The benevolence of God, as concerned for the general good of the universe, requires the execution of the full penalty of the law upon all who reject Christ's salvation. The Scriptures intimate that God's treatment of human sin is a matter of instruction to all moral beings. The self-chosen ruin of the few may be the salvation of the many.
- (4) The present existence of sin and punishment is commonly admitted to be in some way consistent with God's benevolence, in that it is made the means of revealing God's justice and mercy. If the temporary existence of sin and punishment leads to good, it is entirely possible that their eternal existence may lead to greater good.
- (5) As benevolence in God seems in the beginning to have permitted moral evil, not because sin was desirable in itself, but only because it was incident to a system which provided for the highest possible freedom and holiness in the creature; so benevolence in God may to the end permit the existence of sin and may continue to punish the sinner, undesirable as these things are in themselves, because they are incidents of a system which provides for the highest possible freedom and holiness in the creature through eternity.

STUDY QUESTIONS ON ESCHATOLOGY

1. Give reasons showing the importance of the study of Eschatology.
2. Define physical death, showing that from which it is to be distinguished, and that aspect of it which is related to the believer.
3. Give deductions from Scripture which show that death does not mean cessation of being. Quote one passage with each as illustration or proof.
4. Discuss the intermediate state of the dead, in general.
5. Give the six-fold description of the intermediate state of the righteous and quote one passage with each.
6. Give the three-fold description of the intermediate state of the wicked and discuss the two erroneous views that are refuted thereby.
7. Discuss the four great advents of Scripture.
8. Discuss the importance of the Second Coming of Christ, as shown by the prominence given to it, under the following heads: In the Bible as a Whole; In the Old Testament Prophecy (commit to memory Dr. Haldeman's description of the prophetic portrayal of Christ's return); in the Teachings of Jesus Christ; by the Witness of the Angels; in the Preaching of the Apostles (Quote one passage from the testimony of each Apostle mentioned).
9. Give the twelve-fold description of the importance of the Second Coming of Christ as shown by its practical value.
10. Discuss, in general, the importance of the Second Coming of Christ as shown by the vital relation which it sustains to the other doctrines of the Christian faith, and give the seven-fold description of the same, quoting one passage with each.
11. Discuss the importance of the Second Coming of Christ, as shown by the estimate placed upon it, and the emphasis given to it by the early church, and give the gist of the testimony of historians.
12. Discuss the fact of the Second Coming of Christ and quote one passage in proof of the same.
13. Discuss the misinterpretations of the fact of the Second Coming of Christ, with refutations of the same, under the following heads: It means the Coming of Christ in the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost; His providential Coming at the Destruction of Jerusalem; His Coming in the Conversion of the Sinner; His Coming Through the Diffusion of Christianity throughout the World; His Coming at the Death of the Believer.
14. Describe fully the character of the Second Coming of Christ under the following heads: It will be a Personal Coming; It will be a Glorious Coming; It will be a Sudden Coming; It will be a Two-fold Coming; It will be a Pre-millennial Coming.
15. Give the gist of the eleven reasons for believing the Second Coming of Christ to be Pre-millennial.

16. Give Professor Beckwith's recent statement of the Post-millennial doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ.
17. Give the gist of the statements concerning the pre-millennial position.
18. Give a general description of the events associated with the Second Coming of Christ.
19. Discuss the events associated with the Second Coming of Christ with reference to the Church, under the following heads: The Rapture, in its Three-fold Aspect (give illustrations and signification found in notes); the Marriage Supper; Manifestation with Christ.
20. Discuss the Second Coming of Christ with reference to apostate Christendom.
21. Discuss the Second Coming of Christ with reference to Israel, giving in outline her prophetic program.
22. Discuss the Second Coming of Christ with reference to the Gentile Nations.
23. Describe and discuss fully the Antichrist under the following heads: his Names; his Personality (with contrasts); his Origin and Development (with summary of his future origin and development); his Work; his End and Doom.
24. Discuss the Second Coming of Christ with reference to Satan.
25. Discuss the Second Coming of Christ with reference to the millennial Kingdom under the following heads: The Millennium Defined; Descriptive Titles of the Millennium; Characteristics of the Millennium; the Manner of the Inception of the Millennium.
26. Show the resurrection of the dead to be a Scriptural doctrine.
27. Discuss the manner of the resurrection under the following heads: It will be a Literal and Bodily Resurrection; It will be a Universal Resurrection; It will be a Two-fold Resurrection.
28. Discuss the questions concerning two resurrections, as found in the note, and show the correspondence between the passage in Rev. 20 and certain other passages.
29. Discuss the theological objection to the doctrine of a literal resurrection, together with the four-fold reply.
30. Discuss the three-fold scientific objection to the doctrine of a literal resurrection, and give the three-fold reply.
31. Discuss from the note the ultra-literalistic view of the resurrection body, the opposing, extreme view of Origen, and also the view of Paul.
32. Describe the characteristics of the resurrection body, negatively considered.
33. Discuss the characteristics of the resurrection body, positively considered, and quote one passage with each.
34. Discuss the characteristics of the resurrection body of the unbeliever.

35. What do the Scriptures represent and intimate concerning the punishments of individual transgressors and all manifestations of God's vindicatory justice toward men and nations?
36. Discuss the necessity of judgment in general, and under the following heads: It fulfills the Final Requirement of Conscience; It fulfills the Final Requirement of History; It fulfills the Final Requirement of the Theistic View of the World.
37. Discuss the purpose of future judgment.
38. Show the fact of divine judgment as revealed in the Old and New Testament Scriptures, and quote one passage from each.
39. Discuss the fact of future divine judgment, as corroborated by human experience, under the following heads: the Law of Memory; the Law of Conscience; the Law of Character.
40. Give the three-fold description of the Executor of justice, and quote one passage with each.
41. Mention a few of the multiplicity of judgments recorded in Scriptures.
42. Give the three-fold description of the judgment of the cross and quote one passage with each.
43. Discuss the present judgment of the believer's self-life.
44. Discuss the manifestation of the believer before the judgment seat of Christ under the following heads: the Basis of the Examination and Manifestation; the Results of the Manifestation.
45. Describe the crowns of reward to be distributed at the judgment seat of Christ, and quote one passage with each.
46. Discuss the judgment of the living nations, and distinguish between this and the final judgment.
47. Discuss the judgment of Israel.
48. Discuss the judgment of the fallen angels.
49. Discuss the judgment of the Great White Throne.
50. Discuss the final destiny of the righteous under the following heads: They Shall never Die; Death for the Believer is Spoken of as Sleep; at Death the Believer goes to be with Christ; Believers are to be Identified with Christ in His Millennial Reign; the Believer Will Enter into a New Condition and Abode of Life.
51. Discuss the final destiny of the wicked under the following heads: The Scriptures Teach Eternal Punishment to be the Final Visitation of God upon the Wicked; the Future Punishment of the Wicked is not Annihilation; Punishment after Death Excludes New Probation and Ultimate Restoration of the Wicked; Scripture Declares Future Punishment of the Wicked to be Eternal; Everlasting Punishment of the Wicked is not Inconsistent with God's Justice; The Everlasting Punishment of the Wicked is not Inconsistent with God's Benevolence.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

BIBLIOLOGY, THE DOCTRINE OF THE SCRIPTURES

- A. THE BIBLE AS A BOOK.
- B. THE BIBLE AS A DIVINE REVELATION.

Says Dr. A. T. Pierson in his book, "God's Living Oracles," "What the heart of a fortress is to its outworks and minor defences, that, to the Christian faith, is the inspired Word of God—its central stronghold. To give up that, in any measure, is, therefore, insofar, to yield up the whole fortress to the foe.

"Infidelity and irreligion seem now to be massing all their united forces for a combined and final assault upon the whole system of Christianity, and there are signs of a subtle, ingenious and Satanic plot to undermine its very foundations by destroying all belief in the supernatural. All intelligent faith in the supernatural rests, ultimately, upon the divine origin, plenary inspiration and infallible authority of the Bible as the Book of God; and hence, naturally and necessarily, this book becomes the very center both of the attack and the defence.

"Such facts at such a crisis constitute a challenge to the believer to examine anew into the whole question whether there be ample evidence of a superhuman authorship of this Book, carefully to weigh its claims to divine authority, and to determine how far it utters a judgment and verdict from which there is no appeal. In such matters doubt is disaster, for even an honest misgiving is destructive both of intellectual conviction and moral repose, unsettling, if not undermining, the very bases upon which rests human confidence, in the stability of a structure, the like of which never was reared. On the other hand, whatever confirms and establishes faith in the living oracles of God correspondingly affects every interest dearest to the believer and to mankind. If intelligent investigation produces certainty of conviction, the results are manifold: the whole history of Christianity for nearly two thousand years is vindicated; fresh force is imparted to all holy living and new nerve is infused into modern missions at home and abroad, while such faith in the Bible inspires a grand hope for all coming ages. The subject calls for calm, candid, patient investigation. If the Bible be a divine Book, it has nothing to fear from rational inquiry. Investigation will issue in vindication, and the more searching the investigation, the more triumphant the vindication.

"Illustration: A few years ago a party of five, roped together, were climbing a precipitous cliff in the Alps. At a critical point in the ascent, the lowermost man lost foothold, and dragged after him the next above, and so on, till the increased strain caused all the party to lose their foothold, except the leader, who, driving his axe and alpenstock into the ice and bracing himself firmly, enabled the man next below to regain his footing, and so successively each of the four once more recovered himself, because the foremost man had stood the strain. It is not too much to say that, while the Word of God holds its place firmly in the minds and hearts of men, as God's own Book, inbreathed of the Holy Spirit and to be believed and trusted in every part as a divine guide to doctrine and duty, all that is most precious in our Christian faith and life holds its place in our convictions and confidence; but that, if the Bible loses or loosens its hold upon us as an infallible standard of truth and duty, every thing else goes down with it into the same abyss of doubt. For, let it be remembered, the Word of God is the revelation of Jesus Christ, of the Holy Ghost, of the nature and secrets of all spiritual life; without it we have no authentic history of Jesus the Saviour, no knowledge of the way of salvation, no unfolding of the mystery of Godliness, no clear unveiling of the future life."

For such reasons, among many others, it is first of all needful for all believers to have an intelligent, rational, unshakable confidence in God's Word as divine in origin, inspired of the Holy Spirit, a safe guide in belief, and a sure pattern for practice. We say an intelligent and reasonable faith. The "collier's faith" has long been ridiculed as a specimen of blind credulity. "What do you believe?" asked Whitefield of a Roman Catholic worker in the coal pits of Cornwall. "What the Church believes," was the answer. "And what does the Church believe?" "What I believe." "And what do you both believe?" "The same thing." To believe only what, and only because, others believe, may be perpetuating false teaching, helping on what Cyprian called "the old age of error." The Spirit of God enjoins disciples to "be ready always to give an answer to every one that asketh a reason for the hope" that is within them (1 Pet. 3:15). The more intelligent and reasonable faith is, therefore, the more pleasing and honoring to God, the more helpful to men, and the more restful and forceful to oneself.

A. The Bible as a Book.

I The Designations of the Book.

1. The Bible.

This term is one that affirms two things, unity and preeminence. The appropriateness of such a title can hardly be questioned: this conception of oneness through all its parts, of unity and diversity, has been endorsed by the Christian consciousness and has had far reaching influence.

NOTE—It is curious that this title should have been due in part to a mistake. "Bible" is the English form of the name given to the Latin Scriptures, "biblia." This also is a singular, but, in turn, it is the Latin form of the Greek word "biblia" which is not singular, but the plural of "biblion" (book), a diminutive of "biblos," a name given to the outer coat of the papyrus reed. This was stripped off and glued together to form writing material; thus by transference from material to the use made of it, "biblos" came to mean book and "biblion" a little book. In the New Testament the term "biblos" and "biblion" are applied to a single book of the Old Testament or to such a group as the Pentateuch. In the Old Testament we find the plural used of the prophets (Dan. 9:6). It was this plural use that passed over into the Christian Church: from the middle of the second century the Scriptures are spoken of as "the books," the "holy," "divine" or "canonical books." The same notion of plurality rather than unity is seen in another term applied to the Scriptures by certain of the Latin Fathers and later writers, "Bibli- otheca," "Library," or the "Divine Library." But when once the Greek plural noun "Biblia" was adopted in Latin, its original force was forgotten. "Biblia" in grammatical form may be either a neuter plural or a feminine singular: the growing conception of unity in the sacred writings helped to its interpretation as a singular; and so, by error, out of "biblia" (books) came "biblia" (book), i.e., Bible. In our study of the Bible we may need to return to the primitive and proper significance of the term, considering first the parts rather than the whole. But we may also thankfully retain the changed significance as one that has wonderfully helped to give sharpness and fixity to the conception of one Word of God, constant and uniform amid all the separateness and diversity of His words to men. The Bible is at once a Library and a Book.

2. The Old and New Testaments.

The application of the term, Testament, carries us beyond the simple fact of books or writings to some indication of their main theme. Woven into the very texture of the Old Testament is the idea of a Covenant between God and man, first made with Adam, then with Noah, also with Abraham, the nation of Israel and with David. Reference to it occurs again and again throughout history, psalm and prophecy, as the relation into which God entered with His chosen people. In Jeremiah, prophecy reaches its height in the sublime prediction of the New Covenant, a prediction declared by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews to be fulfilled in Jesus Christ.

The Phrase, New Covenant, was appropriated by Christ at the Last Supper, and is claimed by Paul as the substance of the ministry to which he was called. See Luke 22:20; I Cor. 11:25; II Cor. 3:6. The word, testament, means covenant, and is the term used to designate the relation that existed between Himself and His people. The term covenant was first of all applied to the relation itself and afterward to the books which contained the record of that relation: II Cor. 3:6, 14; Heb. 9:15; 12:24.

By the end of the second century we find the "Old Covenant" and the "New Covenant" as the established names of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures; and Origen, in the beginning of the third century, mentioned "the divine Scriptures, the so-called Old and New Covenants." The Old Testament deals with the record of the calling and history of the Jewish nation, and as such it is the Old Covenant. The New Testament deals with the history and application of the redemption wrought by the Lord Jesus Christ, and as such it is the New Covenant.

3. The Law and the Prophets.

The books of the Old Testament fall into several divisions, the grouping of the English version differing from that of the original.

The Hebrew Scriptures are divided into: The Law, The Prophets, The Writings. Probably the three divisions mark three stages in the process of collecting the sacred writings,—in other words, in the history of the Canon. The earliest Jewish Bible was the Law, the five books of Moses or Pentateuch. Later on, this expanded into the Law and the Prophets: later still, a final group was recognized as of divine authority, its general title suggesting the miscellaneous character of its contents; and the Canon was complete—Law, Prophets and Writings.

NOTE—The New Testament references to this ancient grouping of the Jewish Scriptures are interesting. The first division is referred to as "The Law" in many places where there is clearly an allusion to or a quotation from the Pentateuch (Matt. 12:5; 22:36; Luke 10:26). But in accordance with the peculiar reverence attached by the Jews to this portion of the sacred writings, the term "Law" becomes a designation of Old Testament Scripture generally, and is so used in reference to citations from the Psalms (John 10:34; 12:34; 15:25) and from Isaiah (I Cor. 14:21). A fuller title for the Old Testament combines the first two of its three divisions, "The Law and the Prophets" (Matt. 5:17; 7:12; 22:40; Luke 16:29; 24:27; Rom. 3:21). Only once is there a distinct reference to the three-fold grouping: "That all things must needs be fulfilled which are written in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms concerning me": (Luke 24:44, R.V.). Here, either the "Psalms," as the first book of the Hagiographa, stands for the whole of the third division, or our Lord adds to the Law and the Prophets the one other Old Testament book which is most familiar and precious, as well as clearest in its Messianic prediction.

4. The Scripture and the Scriptures.

The Bible is called the Scripture: Mark 12:10; 15:28; Luke 4:21; John 2:22; John 7:38; 10:35; Rom. 4:3; Gal. 4:30; II Pet. 1:20.

It is called the Scriptures: Matt. 22:29; Mark 12:24; Luke 24:27; John 5:39; Acts 17:11; Rom. 1:12; II Tim. 3:15; II Pet. 3:16.

The name applied in the New Testament to the books of the Old Testament collectively is The Writings, or in Latin, The Scriptures. Once we find the phrase, Holy Scriptures, and once with a different form of the Greek word, Sacred Writings.

NOTE—When the singular occurs, it is with reference not to the whole but to some particular passage; e.g., "Today is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears," (Luke 4:21) following a quotation from Isaiah 61. The collective use of "Scripture," familiar to us and embodying the sense of oneness already referred to, was still in the making. The earlier usage is "Writings," "books;" the later, though not the less true, is Scripture.

These terms mean that the Scriptures are Holy Writings. By the early Christians the most common designation for the whole Bible was "The Scriptures."

5. The Word of God.

Of all the names given to the Bible, "The Word of God" is doubtless the most significant, impressive and complete. See Mark 7:12, 13; Rom. 10:17; Heb. 4:12; I Thes. 2:13. The Bible as the Word of God is sufficient to justify the faith of the weakest Christian. It gathers up all that the most earnest search can unfold. It teaches us to regard the Bible as the utterance of divine wisdom and love—as God speaking to man.

II The Symbols of the Book.

The following symbols which are used to illustrate the power and value of the Word of God are found within its pages, and may be classified under seven divisions:

1. The revealing power of the Word is illustrated by the symbol of the mirror: James 1:23-25.
2. The generative power of the Word is illustrated by the symbol of the seed: James 1:18; II Pet. 1:23. See also Matt. 13.
3. The cleansing, purifying power of the Word is illustrated by the symbol of the laver and water: Eph. 5:25-27; John 15:3; Psalms 119:5, 11; John 17:17.

4. The illuminating, guiding power of the Word is illustrated by the symbol of the lamp and the light: Psa. 119:105.
5. The power of the Word to equip for the work and warfare of life is illustrated by the symbols of weapons and implements,—sword and hammer: Jer. 23:29.
6. The enriching and adorning power of the Word is illustrated by the symbols of gold and fine apparel: Psa. 19:10; I Pet. 3:3-5.
7. The nourishing, sustaining and satisfying power of the Word is illustrated by the symbols of milk, meat, bread and honey: I Pet. 2:2; I Cor. 3:1, 2; Matt. 4:4; Job 23:12; John 6:35, 51; Heb. 5:12-14; Psa. 19:10

B. The Bible as a Divine Revelation.

I The Definition of a Divine Revelation.

Revelation may be defined as a supernatural communication from God to man, either oral or written. The term is usually understood of a written communication. Horne says, "Revelation is a discovery by God to man of Himself, or of His will over and above what He has made known by the light of nature or reason."

II The Reasonableness of a Divine Revelation.

1. A Divine Revelation is Possible.

Granted the existence of a personal God, omniscient and omnipotent, there can be no insurmountable difficulty to belief in such a revelation as that claimed for the Scriptures.

2. A Divine Revelation is Probable.

Granted the sovereign grace and wisdom of God, it is logical to expect that these would prompt Him as man's creator and ruler to communicate with man. Philosophers of all ages have thought a divine revelation probable and have expected it.

3. A Divine Revelation Credible.

Granted that a special divine revelation is both possible and probable, it is natural and easy to believe that one has been given. Human nature is more credulous than incredulous. Thus, in all ages, mankind has been prone to believe in alleged supernatural revelations. Witness the wide acceptance of such so-called sacred books as the Koran, the Book of Mormon, Zend-Avesta of the Parsees, Records of Spiritism, Mrs. Eddy's "Science and Health," "Key to the Scriptures."

4. A Divine Revelation is Necessary.

- (1) The imperfect light of nature calls for the perfect light of revelation. Nature throws no light on the trinity, the atonement, pardon, method of worship, personal existence after death, etc. Even the truth to which we arrive by our natural powers needs divine confirmation and authority when it addresses minds and wills perverted by sin. To break this power of sin and to furnish encouragement to moral effort, we need a special divine revelation of the merciful and helpful aspect of the divine nature. While conscience gives proof that God is a God of holiness, we have not, from the light of nature, equal evidence that God is a God of love.

Reason teaches man that, as a sinner, he merits condemnation; but he cannot from reason alone know that God will have mercy upon him and provide salvation. His doubts can be removed only by God's own voice, assuring him of redemption in Christ's blood—the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of His grace, and revealing to him the way in which that forgiveness has been rendered possible.

- (2) The dense ignorance, low morality, and abject helplessness of man in his natural state demands the illumination, righteousness, and power which the Scriptures reveal and provide. The Babylonians worshipped nature; the Egyptians, animals; the Greeks and Romans deified passions and powers of men.
- (3) Man's spiritual longings require the satisfaction which revelation alone can fulfil: Job 31:35.
- (4) Man needs a final authority for creed and conduct, for faith and practice, which can be had only in an authoritative revelation from God.

III The Certainty of a Divine Revelation.

The above grounds afford strong presumption for the reasonableness of believing in a revelation from God; that is, the Holy Scriptures. But we are not left without absolute certainty that the Bible is such a revelation. By the two-fold proof of attested miracle and fulfilled prophecy God has certified His Book.

1. The Attestation of Miracles.

(1) Definitions of miracles.

A. Preliminary definition.

A miracle is an event obvious to the senses, produced for a holy purpose by the immediate agency of God; an event, therefore, which (though not necessarily conflicting with any law of nature), the laws of nature, if fully known, would not, without this immediate agency of God, be competent to explain.

This definition corrects several erroneous conceptions of a miracle:

- a. A miracle is not a suspension or violation of natural law; since natural law is in operation at the time of the miracle just as much as before.
- b. A miracle is not a sudden product of natural agencies—a product merely foreseen by him who appears to work it; it is the effect of a will outside of nature.
- c. A miracle is not an event without a cause; since it has for its cause a direct volition of God.

- d. A miracle is not an irrational or capricious act of God; but an act of wisdom, performed in accordance with the immutable laws of His being, so that in the same circumstances the same course would be again pursued.
- e. A miracle is not contrary to experience; since it is not contrary to experience for a new cause to be followed by a new effect.
- f. A miracle is not a matter of internal experience, like regeneration or illumination; but is an event obvious to the senses, which may serve as an objective proof to all that the worker of it is divinely commissioned as a teacher of revealed truth.

NOTE—The definition given above is intended merely as a definition of the miracles of the Bible, or, in other words, of the events which profess to attest a divine revelation in the Scriptures. The New Testament designates these events in a two-fold way, viewing them either subjectively, as producing effects upon men, or objectively, as revealing the power and wisdom of God. In the former aspect they are called "wonders" (terata) and "signs" (semeia): Acts 2:22; John 4:48. In the latter aspect they are called "powers" (dunamis) and "works" (erga): Matt. 7:22; John 14:11.

B. An Alternate Definition.

A miracle is an event in nature, so extraordinary in itself and so coinciding with the prophecy or command of the divinely commissioned teacher or leader, as fully to warrant the conviction, on the part of those who witness it, that God has wrought it with the design of certifying that this teacher or leader has been commissioned by Him.

NOTE—The above definition involves the following conclusions:

- A. It recognizes the immanence of God and His immediate agency in nature, instead of assuming an antithesis between the laws of nature and the will of God.
- B. It regards the miracle as simply an extraordinary act of that same God Who is already present in all natural operations and Who in them is revealing His general plan.
- C. It holds that natural law, as the method of God's regular activity, in no way precludes unique exertions of His power when these will best secure His purpose in creation.
- D. It leaves it possible that all miracles may have their natural explanations and may hereafter be traced to natural causes, while both miracles and their natural causes may be only names for the one and self-same will of God.
- E. It reconciles the claims of both science and religion: of science, by permitting any possible or probable physical antecedents of the miracle; of religion, by maintaining that these very antecedents together with the miracle itself are to be interpreted as signs of God's special commission to him under whose teaching or leadership the miracle is wrought.

(2) The Possibility of Miracles.

An event in nature may be caused by an agent in nature yet above nature. This is evident from the following considerations:

- A. Lower forces and laws in nature are frequently counteracted and transcended by the higher. For example mechanical forces and laws are counteracted and transcended by chemical forces and laws, and these in turn by the vital or living, and yet these lower forces and laws are not suspended or annihilated by the higher.

B. The human will acts upon its physical organism, and so upon nature, and produces results which nature left to herself never could have accomplished, while yet no law of nature is suspended or violated. Gravitation still acts upon the axe, even while man holds it at the surface of the water—for the axe still has weight (cf. II Kings 6:5-7).

C. In all free causation, there is an acting without means. Man acts upon external nature through his physical organism, but, in moving his physical organism, he acts directly upon matter. In other words the human will can use means, only because it has the power of acting initially without means.

D. What the human will, considered as a supernatural force, and what the chemical and vital forces of nature itself, are demonstrably able to accomplish, cannot be regarded as beyond the power of God, so long as God dwells in and controls the universe. If man's will can act directly upon matter in his own physical organism, God's will can work immediately upon the system which he has created and which He sustains. In other words, if there be a God, and if He be a personal being, miracles are possible. The impossibility of miracles can be maintained only upon principles of atheism or pantheism.

E. This possibility of miracles becomes doubly sure to those who see in Christ none other than the immanent God manifested to creatures. The Logos or divine Reason who is the principle of all growth and development can make God known only by means of successive new impartations of His energy. Since all progress implies addition or increase, and Christ is the only source of life, the whole history of creation is a witness to the possibility of miracles.

(3) The Probability of Miracles.

A. We acknowledge that, so long as we confine our attention to nature, there is a presumption against miracles. Experience testifies to the uniformity of natural law. A general uniformity is needful, in order to make possible a rational calculation of the future, and a proper ordering of life.

NOTE—Where there is no law, no settled order, there can be no miracle. The miracle presupposes the law, and the importance assigned to miracles is the recognition of the law.

B. We deny, however, that this uniformity of nature is absolute and universal.

a. It is not a truth of reason that can have no exceptions, like the axiom that a whole is greater than its parts.

b. Experience could not warrant a belief in absolute and universal uniformity, unless experience were identical with absolute and universal knowledge.

c. We know, on the contrary, from the record in Genesis, that there have been changes in this uniformity, such as the introduction of vegetable, animal and human life, which cannot be accounted for, except by the manifestation of supernatural power.

- C. Since the inworking of the moral law into the constitution and course of nature shows that nature exists, not for itself, but for the contemplation and use of moral beings, it is probable that the God of nature will produce effects aside from those of natural law, whenever there are sufficiently important moral ends to be served thereby.
- D. The existence of moral disorder consequent upon the free acts of man's will, therefore, changes the presumption against miracles into a presumption in their favor. The non-appearance of miracles, in this case, would be the greatest of wonders.
- E. As belief in the possibility of miracles rests upon our belief in the existence of a personal God, so belief in the probability of miracles rests upon our belief that God is a moral and benevolent being. He who has no God but a God of physical order will regard miracles as an impertinent intrusion upon that order. But he who yields to the testimony of conscience and regards God as a God of holiness, will see that man's unholiness renders God's miraculous interposition most necessary to man and most becoming to God. Our view of miracles will therefore be determined by our belief in a moral, or in a non-moral, God.
- F. Since God is not merely the intellectual but the moral Reason of the world, the disturbances of the world-order which are due to sin are the matters which most deeply affect Him. Christ, the Life of the whole system and of humanity as well, must suffer; and, since we have evidence that He is merciful as well as just, it is probable that He will rectify the evil by extraordinary means, when merely ordinary means do not avail.

(4) The Plausibility of Miracles.

The amount of testimony necessary to prove a miracle is no greater than that which is requisite to prove the occurrence of any other unusual but confessedly possible event.

Hume, indeed, argued that a miracle is so contradictory of all human experience that it is more reasonable to believe any amount of testimony false than to believe a miracle to be true. The argument maintains for substance that things are impossible because improbable. It ridicules the credulity of those who "thrust their fists against the post, and still insist they see the ghosts," and holds with the German philosopher who declared that he would not believe a miracle even if he saw one with his own eyes.

- A. This argument is based upon a false premise, in making our own personal experience the measure of all human experience. The same principle would make a proof of any absolutely new fact impossible. Even though God should work a miracle He could never prove it.

B. It involves a self-contradiction since it seeks to overthrow our faith in human testimony by adducing to the contrary the general experience of men, of which we know only from testimony. This general experience, moreover, is merely negative, and cannot neutralize that which is positive, except upon principles that would invalidate all testimony whatever.

C. It requires belief in a greater wonder than those which it would escape. That multitudes of intelligent and honest men should, against all their interests, unite in deliberate and persistent falsehood, under the circumstances narrated in the New Testament record, involves a change in the sequences of nature far more incredible than the miracles of Christ and His apostles.

(5) The Evidential Value of Miracles.

A. Miracles are the natural accompaniments and attestations of new communications from God. The great epochs of miracles—represented by Moses, the prophets, the first and second comings of Christ—are coincident with the great epochs of revelation. Miracles serve to draw attention to new truth, and cease when this truth has gained currency and foothold.

B. Miracles generally certify to the truth of doctrine, not directly but indirectly; otherwise a new miracle must needs accompany each new doctrine taught. Miracles primarily and directly certify to the divine commission and authority of the teacher or messenger, and therefore warrant acceptance of his doctrines and obedience to his commands as the doctrines and commands of God, whether these be communicated at intervals or all together, orally or in written documents.

C. Miracles, therefore, do not stand alone as evidences. Power alone cannot prove a divine commission. Purity of life and doctrine must go with the miracles to assure us that a teacher is come from God. The miracles and the doctrine in this manner mutually support each other, and form parts of one whole. The internal evidence for the Christian system may have greater power over certain minds and over certain ages than the external evidence.

D. The Christian miracles do not lose their value as evidence in the process of ages. The loftier the structure of Christian life and doctrine the greater need that its foundation be secure. The authority of Christ as a teacher of supernatural truth rests upon His miracles, and especially upon the miracles of His resurrection. That one miracle to which the Church looks back as the source of her life carries with it irresistibly all the other miracles of Scripture record; upon it alone we may safely rest the proof that the Scriptures are an authoritative revelation from God.

E. The resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ—by which we mean His coming forth from the sepulchre in body as well as in Spirit—is demonstrated by evidence as varied and conclusive as that which proves to us any single fact of ancient history. Without it Christianity itself is inexplicable, as is shown by the failure of all modern rationalistic theories to account for its rise and progress.

F. Christ's evaluation of miracles.

Christ declared that the eternal fate of Chorazin and Bethsaida resulted from their disregard of His miracles: Matt. 11:21,22. John the Baptist was to be confirmed in his faith in Him as the Messiah by the record of His miracles: Luke 7:22.

Jesus declares explicitly that the work which He did, and which the Father had given Him to finish bore witness of Him that the Father had sent Him: John 5:36.

If men would not believe Him they were asked to believe His works: John 10:25, 26, 37, 38.

Jesus emphasized the fact that it was sin on the part of His countrymen not to believe in His miracles: John 15:24.

2. The Attestation of Fulfilled Prophecy.

Prophecy is here considered in its limited meaning as referring to prediction.

(1) Definition of Prophecy.

Prophecy is the foretelling of future events by virtue of direct communication from God—a foretelling, therefore, which, though not contravening any laws of the human mind, those laws, if fully known, would not, without this agency of God, be sufficient to explain. Or, prophecy is the communication by God to man of a knowledge of events still future, which otherwise he could not have discovered.

NOTE—Miracles are attestations of revelation proceeding from divine power; prophecy is an attestation proceeding from divine knowledge. Only God can know the contingencies of the future. The possibility and probability of prophecy may be argued upon the same ground upon which we argue the possibility and probability of miracles. As an evidence of divine revelation, however, prophecy possesses two advantages over miracles, namely: a. The proof, in the case of prophecy, is not derived from ancient testimony but is under our eyes; b. The evidence of miracles cannot become stronger, whereas every new fulfilment adds to the argument from prophecy.

(2) Requirements in Prophecy as an Evidence of Revelation.

There are certain criteria by which prophecy must be judged and on which its evidential value must depend. Here one is justified in saying that Bible prophecy amply fulfills these criteria.

A. It must concern events which no human sagacity could discover.

Philosophical historians or statesmen may forecast national convulsion or social revolutions by studying the annals of the past, and watching the development of current events, but the predictions of the whole Bible are almost wholly outside the range of probability or precedent.

- B. It must be known before the event takes place, and its utterance must be distant from the event.

Moses' prediction of Israel's history in Deuteronomy 28, covers this and the preceding point. Clearly predicted long before their actual occurrence, how improbable were the Babylonian captivity, the Roman seige, the present scattered, persecuted, and yet expectant condition of that people.

Take again the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah or Ezekiel concerning the downfall of the great capitals of Nineveh, of Babylon, the desolation of Tyre, and the debasement of mighty Egypt, to say nothing of their predictions and those of others concerning the personal history of the Messiah.

- C. It must be sufficiently clear in statement and yet sufficiently minute in detail, to identify its fulfillment beyond the possibility of dispute.

Bible prophecy enters astonishingly into details. An examination of the subject has shown that in each of the more prominent subjects of prophecy, there are from twenty to forty particulars, while in those concerning the Messiah, there are no less than three hundred minutiae, making the chances of accidental coincidence less than one in ten thousands of millions.

- D. It would add to the evidential value of prophecy did it contain an element of obscurity or mystery which only the fulfillment could explain.

The elements of mysteriousness and obscurity are not lacking from many of the Bible predictions. The paradoxes which they contain add greatly to their supernatural character. For example, any one can see that many of the events and circumstances foretold of Israel, are as far as possible from being such as would in the day of their utterance have naturally occurred to the mind of the patriotic Israelite endeavoring to forecast the future of his nation and his country. Indeed, they were offensive to his pride and contradictory to the fixed religious beliefs of his nation, in evidence of which we have the fact that they were almost unanimously disbelieved by the great majority of the people to whom they were addressed. The prophets were severely persecuted and sometimes put to death for giving utterance to such things. See Jer. 7:4; Ezek. 11:2, 3; Micah 3:11.

NOTE—This feature of mysteriousness and obscurity is especially conspicuous in the prophecies concerning the Messiah. For example, He was to be a "root out of dry ground," and yet a "fruitful branch"; a sufferer unto death, and yet not holden of death; without offspring, yet possessing numerous seed; condemned as a malefactor, yet justifying transgressors. These contradictions, it has been well said, present a problem no human wisdom was able to solve. To Jewish rabbis they seemed altogether irreconcilable, and suggested the idea of two Messiahs united in the one great work.

E. There must be no collusion or fraudulent intention of fulfillment on the part of the human agents concerned.

Bible prophecy fulfills this qualification because of its distant removal in time from its fulfillment and also because often those who uttered it were not aware of that which was involved in its fulfillment.

F. It should be worthy of God in its character and design.

Bible prophecy is noticeably characterized by the absence of the sordid and trivial and by the presence of that which gives it a high moral value.

NOTE—Certain prophecies apparently contain a fulness of meaning which is not exhausted by the event to which they most obviously and literally refer. A prophecy which had a partial fulfillment at a time not remote from its utterance, may find its chief fulfillment in an event far distant. Since the principles of God's administration find ever recurring and ever enlarging illustration in history, prophecies which have already had a partial fulfillment may have their complete fulfillment yet before them. This is called the law of double reference.

(3) Evidential Value of Fulfilled Prophecy.

Prophecy, like miracles, does not stand alone as evidence of the divine commission of the Scripture writers and teachers. It is simply a corroborative attestation which unites with miracles to prove that a teacher of truth has come from God and speaks with divine authority. We cannot, however, dispense with this portion of the evidences—for unless the death and resurrection of Christ are events foreknown and foretold by Himself, as well as by the ancient prophets, we lose one main proof of His authority as a Teacher sent from God.

NOTE—In Isaiah 41:21-23 we have what is probably the most remarkable challenge to be found in the Bible. "Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob. Let them bring forth, and show us what shall happen; let them show the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come. Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods." This Scripture has both a negative and a positive value: negatively, it suggests an infallible criterion by which we may test the claims of religious impostors; positively, it calls attention to an unanswerable argument for the truthfulness of God's Word. Jehovah bids the prophets of false faiths to successfully predict events lying in the far distant future, and their success or failure will show whether or not they are gods or merely pretenders and deceivers. On the other hand, the demonstrated fact that God alone grasps the ages and in His Word declares the end from the beginning, shows that He is God and that the Scriptures are His revelation to mankind. Again and again, men have attempted to predict future events but always with the most disastrous failure; the anticipations of the most far-seeing and the precautions of the wisest are mocked repeatedly by the bitter irony of events. Man stands before an impenetrable wall of darkness; he is unable to foresee the events of even the next hour. None knows what a day may bring forth. To the finite mind the future is filled with unknown possibilities. How then can we explain the hundreds of detailed prophecies in the Scriptures which have been literally fulfilled to the very letter, hundreds of years after they were uttered? How can we account for the fact that the Bible successfully foretold hundreds and in some instances thousands of years beforehand, the history of the Jews, the course of the Gentiles, and the experiences of the Church? The most conservative of critics and the most daring assailants of God's Word are compelled to acknowledge that all the books of the Old Testament were written hundreds of years before the incarnation of our Lord, hence, the actual and accurate fulfillment of these prophecies can only be explained on the hypothesis that "Prophecy came not in any time by the will of men: but holy men of God, spake, moved by the Holy Ghost."

IV—The Method of Divine Revelation.

The method by which divine truth is communicated to man is three-fold: revelation, illumination, and inspiration.

1. Revelation.

Revelation as distinguished from either illumination or inspiration may be defined as that act of God by which He communicates to the mind of man truth not known before, and incapable of being discovered by the mind of man unaided. Thus used it is also to be distinguished from the term revelation as descriptive of the truth thus communicated. This mode of the divine action in communicating new truth operated variously: by mental suggestion, by external vision, as well as by oral statement.

2. Illumination.

Illumination as distinguished from revelation and inspiration may be defined as the divine quickening of the human mind in virtue of which it is enabled to understand truth already revealed. By "truth already revealed" is meant the truth of the Holy Scriptures.

"What light is to the eyes, illumination is to the mind:" Luke 24:32, 45. See also Matt. 16:17; I Cor. 2:10, 14.

3. Inspiration.

(1) Definition of Inspiration.

Inspiration may be defined as that operation of the divine Spirit which renders a speaker or writer infallible in the communication of truth whether previously known or not.

Or, to give an alternate definition: By the inspiration of the Scriptures, we mean that special divine influence upon the minds of the Scripture writers in virtue of which their productions, apart from errors of transcription and when rightly interpreted, together constitute an infallible rule of faith and practice.

NOTE—Revelation concerns the discovery of truth; illumination the understanding of truth; inspiration the communication of truth. These may act co-operatively or separately. Instances of this are as follows:

- A. Inspiration without revelation: Luke 1:1-3. See also Acts.
- B. Inspiration including revelation: Rev. 1:1, 11.
- C. Inspiration without illumination, as in the prophets: I Pet. 1:11.
- D. Inspiration including illumination, as in the case of Paul: I Cor. 2:12.
- E. Revelation without inspiration, as in God's words from Sinai: Ex. 20:1, 22.
- F. Illumination without inspiration, as in modern preachers: Eph. 2:20.

Further considerations of the meaning of inspiration.

- A. Inspiration as a general term may be used as including all those kinds and degrees of the Holy Spirit's influence which were brought to bear upon the minds of the Scripture writers, in order to secure the putting into written and permanent form of the truth which God has communicated to man.

B. Inspiration may often include revelation, or the direct communication from God, of truth to which man could not attain by his unaided powers. It may include illumination, or the quickening of man's cognitive powers to understand truth already revealed. Inspiration, however, does not necessarily and always include either revelation or illumination. It is simply the divine influence which secures a transmission of needed truth to the future, and, according to the nature of the truth to be transmitted, it may be only an inspiration of superintendence, or it may be also and at the same time an inspiration of illumination or revelation.

C. It is not denied but affirmed, that inspiration may qualify for oral utterance of truth, or for any other service to which one may be called of God. For illustration of this, see Ex. 31:1-11; 35:30-35.

It is not, however, in the general sense that we use it with reference to the Bible; but in the particular sense, i. e., that God guided, directed, and controlled the human writers in accurately and inerrantly setting forth the revelation of Himself and His will to man. This revelation of God and His will is found in the Scriptures and can be found nowhere else.

(2) The Nature of Inspiration.

A. Theoretical Views of Inspiration.

a. The Intuition Theory, or Natural Inspiration.

This holds that inspiration is but a higher development of that natural insight into truth which all men possess to some degree; a mode of intelligence in matters of morals and religion which gives rise to sacred books, as a corresponding mode of intelligence in matters of secular truth gives rise to great works of philosophy and art. This mode of intelligence is regarded as the product of man's own powers, either without special divine influence or with only the inworking of an impersonal God. It denies that there is anything supernatural, mysterious, or peculiar in the mode of the Spirit's operation in and upon the Scripture writers. It claims that they were no more inspired than were Milton, Shakespeare, Mahomet, or Confucius. With regard to this theory we remark:

(a) Man has, indeed, a certain natural insight into truth and we grant that inspiration uses this, so far as it will go, and makes it an instrument in discovering and recording facts of nature or history.

(b) In all matters of morals and religion, however, man's insight into truth is vitiated by wrong affections, and, unless a supernatural wisdom can guide him, he is certain to err himself, and to lead others into error. See I Cor. 2:10, 11; Num. 12:6-8.

- (c) The theory in question, holding as it does that natural insight is the only source of religious truth, involves a self contradiction: if the theory be true, then one man is inspired to utter what a second is inspired to pronounce false. The Vedas, the Koran, and the Bible cannot be inspired to contradict each other. The Vedas permit thieving, and the Koran teaches salvation by works; these cannot be inspired and the Bible also.
 - (d) It makes moral and religious truth to be a purely subjective thing—a matter of private opinion—having no objective reality independently of men's opinions regarding it.
 - (e) It logically involves the denial of a personal God who is truth and reveals truth, and so makes man to be the highest intelligence in the universe. This is to explain inspiration by denying its existence; since, if there be no personal God, inspiration is but a figure of speech for a purely natural fact.
- b. The Illumination Theory, or Universal Christian Inspiration. This regards inspiration as merely an intensifying and elevating of the religious perceptions of the Christians, the same in kind, though greater in degree, with the illumination of every believer by the Holy Spirit. It holds, not that the Bible is, but that it contains, the Word of God, and not the writings, but only the writers were inspired. The illumination given by the Holy Spirit, however, puts the inspired writer only in full possession of his normal powers, but does not communicate objective truth beyond his ability to discover or understand.

With regard to this theory we remark:

- (a) There is unquestionably an illumination of the mind of every believer by the Holy Spirit, and we grant that there may have been instances in which the influence of the Spirit, in inspiration, amounted only to illumination. For illustrations see applications and interpretations of Old Testament Scripture: John 1:29; Acts 2:27.
- (b) We deny, however, that this was the constant method of inspiration, or that such an influence can account for the revelation of new truth to the apostles and prophets. The illumination of the Holy Spirit gives no new truth, but only a vivid apprehension of the truth already revealed. Any original communication of truth must have required a work of the Spirit different, not in degree but in kind.
- (c) Mere illumination could not secure the Scripture writers from frequent and grievous error. The spiritual perception of the Christian is always rendered to some extent imperfect and deceptive by remaining depravity. The subjective element so predominates in this theory, that no certainty remains even with regard to the trustworthiness of the Scriptures as a whole.

(d) The theory is logically indefensible, as intimating that illumination with regard to truth can be imparted without imparting truth itself, whereas God must first furnish objective truth to be perceived before He can illuminate the mind to perceive the meaning of that truth.

c. The Dictation Theory or Mechanical Inspiration.

This theory holds that inspiration consisted in such a possession of the minds and bodies of the Scripture writers by the Holy Spirit, that they became passive instruments or amanuenses pens, not penmen of God.

(a) We grant that there are instances when God's communications were uttered in an audible voice and took a definite form of words, and that this was sometimes accompanied with the command to commit the words to writing. For example see: Ex. 3:4; Dan. 4:31; Acts 9:5; Rev. 19:9; 21:5.

(b) The theory in question, however, rests upon a partial induction of Scripture facts—unwarrantably assuming that such occasional instances of direct dictation reveal the invariable method of God's communications of truth to the writers of the Bible.

(c) It cannot account for the manifestly human element in the Scriptures. There are peculiarities of style which distinguish the productions of each writer from those of every other.

d. The Verbal, Plenary Theory, or Full Inspiration.

By verbal inspiration we mean that the very words of Scripture were given by the Holy Spirit, that the writers were not left absolutely to themselves in the choice of words they should use, but were divinely directed in their selection. This interpretation opposes the concept or thought theory which claims that only the concepts, or thoughts, of men were given by inspiration.

By plenary inspiration we mean that the Scriptures are fully and equally inspired in all their parts. This opposes the teaching of partial inspiration, expressed in the statement: "The Bible contains the Word of God."

NOTE—Those who hold this view claim it not for any version or translation but for the Scriptures as they first appeared, or the original manuscripts. But some one may say, "Is not this question after all only academic? What is the use of contending for an inspired original when we do not possess it? No one claims the original autographs to be now existent, we have only translations at the best. Why then insist upon an inerrant source?"

The answer is, in the first place, that consistency demands it. The Scriptures themselves claim such an inerrant source.

In the second place, God's honor is at stake here. To quote an apt though homely remark of another, "A man who wears a pair of patched trousers may have little interest in knowing that they were whole when they came from the tailor's hands, but not so in the case of the tailor. His reputation demands that they shall have been perfect when they were delivered." We have no right to say that God may have given a revelation of Himself and His will to man which contains a single error, any more than we have a right to say that He created a world in which sin existed.

In the third place, there is a scientific reason for this claim. What is the use or value of textual criticism if there be no perfect source of Holy Writ?

Why do Bible scholars make so much of words, and phrases, and shades of meanings, and comparisons, and manuscripts, and versions, if at the basis of it all there is no ground of certainty? If men drive piles in the earth, it is because they expect to find bottom somewhere, and if men dig into the original roots of the Scriptures, it is because they expect to find, and feel the necessity of finding, a solid footing at the end. And, as a matter of fact, they have found this footing. This is not to say that in the present translation of either the Old or New Testaments we have in every instance the word of the original, but this is so nearly so as to make it practically true. So far as the Old Testament is concerned, scholars can point out the variant readings and the places that are in doubt here and there, which is the same as to say that the remainder is not in doubt; and the remainder is so nearly the whole that if all the doubtful readings were omitted altogether, they would not affect one essential historical fact or doctrinal teaching. As to the New Testament, in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of every thousand, we have the very word of the original.

B. The Scriptural View of Inspiration.

The verbal, plenary theory or full inspiration, is in accord with the general teaching of the Scriptures. Inspiration is as much a matter of divine revelation as is justification by faith or any other Bible doctrine. It stands upon the authority of the Scriptures themselves, which must be the final court of appeal on this subject, as on every question of revealed truth. What the Bible teaches about its own inspiration is a matter purely of divine testimony, and our business is simply to receive the testimony as such.

Not only does the Bible claim to be a divine revelation, but it also asserts that its original manuscripts were written "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth:" I Cor. 2:13. The Bible nowhere claims to have been written by inspired men; as a matter of fact some of them were very defective characters—David for example—but it insists that the words they uttered and recorded were God's words. When we speak of the inspiration of the original Scriptures, we are speaking of the record only; that is, of the writings and not necessarily of the human writers themselves, or any of the human speakers who are referred to or quoted from. This is a distinction necessary to be kept in mind in order to avoid confusion of thought and apparently contradictory statements. For example the human writers were themselves more or less mistaken and at times unholy in their thought. See Num. 20:10, 11; Ex. 32:32; I Sam. 20:3; Acts 23:5; Gal. 2:14. But while the writers may have been mistaken in their thought, the only consistent theory of inspiration is that they were never so as to their words written in the Holy Scripture. The writings were always inspired, though the writers were not always inspired men. The teaching of the Bible concerning the inspiration of the Scriptures is clear and simple, and uniform throughout. Its writers were conscious that their utterances were a message from God in the highest meaning of the word. This is in accord with the statement of II Tim. 3:16 that all Scripture is theopneustic, that is to say, all is given by the Spirit or by the breath of God. It admits of no exception; it is the whole Scripture, all that is written, that is, the thoughts that have already put on the clothing of language. It admits of no restriction; all Scripture is so far a work of God, that it is represented to us as given by the breath of God, in the same manner as the word of a man is given by the breath of his mouth.

NOTE—The verbal, plenary theory of inspiration is largely based on the teaching of II Tim. 3:16. The revised rendering of this passage is erroneous and misleading. "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable."

The reader might infer from it that there is some Scripture that is not inspired. If Paul had said, "All Scripture that is divinely inspired is also profitable," he would virtually have said, "There is some Scripture, some part of the Bible, that is not profitable," and therefore not inspired. This is what the spirit of rationalism wants, namely, to make human reason the test and judge and measure of what is inspired and what is not. One man says such and such a verse is not profitable to him, another says such and such a verse is not profitable to him, and a third may select another verse entirely as not being profitable to him, the result is that no Bible is left.

Is it possible that any need be told the flat and sapless tautology that all divinely-inspired Scripture is also profitable? Paul dealt in no such meaningless phrases. The word "kai" translated "also" does not mean "also" here,—it means "and." Its position in the sentence shows this.

Again, the Revised Version is shown to be openly false because the revisers refused to render the same Greek construction elsewhere in the same way, which convicts them of error.

In Hebrews 4:13 we read: "All things are naked and laid open before the eyes of Him with Whom we have to do." The form and construction of this verse is identical with that of II Tim. 3:16. Were we, however, to translate this passage as the revisers translated the passage in Timothy, it would read: "All naked things are also open to the eyes of Him with Whom we have to do." All naked things are also open things! All uncovered things are also exposed things! There is no "also" in the case.

Again I Tim. 4:4: "Every creature of God is good and nothing to be rejected." According to the principles the Revisers adopted in rendering II Tim. 3:16, this passage would read: "Every good creature of God is also nothing to be rejected." The Greek language has no such meaningless syntax. The place of the verb "is," which must be supplied, is directly before the word "inspired," and not after it.

The great rationalistic scholar, DeWette, confessed candidly that the rendering the revisers here adopted cannot be defended. In his German version of the text, he gave the sense thus: "Every sacred writing, i.e., of the canonical Scriptures, is inspired of God, and is useful for doctrine," etc.

Bishops Moberly and Wordsworth, Archbishop Trench, and others of the Revision Committee disclaimed any responsibility for the rendering. Dean Burgon pronounced it, "The most astonishing as well as calamitous literary blunder of the age." It is condemned by Dr. Tregelles, the only man ever pensioned by the British Government for scholarship. In accordance with this weight of testimony, therefore, we hold to the rendering of the Authorized Version and claim that all Scripture is equally and fully inspired of God.

The teachings of the Scriptures concerning their own inspiration may be exemplified by the following:

- a. The nature of the inspiration of the Scriptures as attested by Christ.

Jesus Christ knew whether the Scriptures were true, inspired and authoritative. He knew the writers. Whatever He said about the Scriptures is therefore true and final to every believer.

- (a) His testimony concerning the Old Testament Scriptures:

He endorsed the Mosaic authorship and inspiration of the Pentateuch: Matt. 22:23-32; Mark 7:8-13; 12:26; John 5:46; Luke 16:29-31; 24:25-27, 44, 45; John 17:17. He endorsed the miraculous narratives of the Old Testament as true: Creation: Matt. 19:4; the flood: Luke 17:27; the destruction of Sodom: Luke 17:29; Lot's wife: Luke 17:32; Jonah: Matt. 12:40; Naaman: Luke 4:27.

He endorsed the Psalms and Prophetical books as inspired: Mark 12:36; Luke 4:17-21; Matt. 24:15.

(b) His testimony concerning the New Testament Scriptures.

Not one word of the New Testament had been written when Christ departed from the earth; but we have His express authority for receiving it as the inspired Word of God.

He said plainly that He would leave the revelation of truth unfinished: John 16:12. He promised that the revelation should be completed after His departure; John 16:13. He chose certain persons to receive such additional revelations, and to be His witnesses, preachers and teachers after His departure: John 16:13; 15:27; Acts 1:8; Matt. 28:19, 20; Acts 9:15-17.

Knowing beforehand what they would write, He gave their words precisely the same authority as His own: Matt. 10:14, 15; Luke 10:16; John 13:20; 17:20.

b. The extent of the inspiration of the Scriptures as indicated:

(a) By the testimony of Christ.

John 6:63; 8:47; 12:48; 14:10; 17:8; Matt. 5:18.

(b) By the testimony of the writers.

Moses: Ex. 4:10-12; 34:27.

David: II Sam. 23:2.

Solomon: Prov. 30:6.

Isaiah: Isa. 6:5-8.

Jeremiah: Jer. 1:7; 36:1, 2.

Zechariah: Zech. 7:7.

Balaam: Num. 22:38; 23:12-16.

Paul: I Cor. 2:13.

Jude: Jude 3, 17.

We conclude, therefore, upon the testimony of Christ and the writers themselves that the Scriptures are verbally inspired—that the Holy Spirit gave the words. The notion that the inspiration is in the concept and not in the words is contrary to the express declaration of the witnesses who knew.

(3) Proofs of the Inspiration of the Bible.

A. External Proofs.

a. Its place in literature.

In nature there are conspicuous phenomena which demand explanation. The boulder is such a phenomenon. Whether or not man's science can satisfactorily account for it, the boulder is an indisputable fact and as such must be dealt with. The science would be blind and the philosophy folly that would deny or dispute its existence.

In the world of letters there are also phenomena which call for investigation and explanation, and foremost among them all is the Bible. Hitherto human science and philosophy have failed to account for it on any purely natural basis. Nevertheless, the Bible is a fact, no less to be denied than the boulder. Within its pages may be found its own explanation. It claims to be a supernatural revelation. If this theory be accepted it adequately accounts for the Book.

This Book occupies the peerless place in the literature of all ages. Hence, its name "The Bible," attributed to "John of the golden mouth." At a time when all literature was but in its beginning, appeared a Book that rather befits the ending. When the foundation for the pyramid of letters was being laid, there was brought forth one stone of matchless symmetry, itself a little pyramid, the only fit apex to complete and crown the whole structure, a capstone whose lines and angles might well determine the dimensions and proportions, lines and angles of the pyramid. Whence came this capstone, while as yet the cornerstone of literature was scarce laid? In what quarry was it found and by what hand was it hewn? It is, moreover, of no common material, but a precious stone, a colossal gem, the like of which is found in none of the richest quarries or mines of the earth.

Thus to describe the Bible is not merely to indulge in the poetry of rhetoric, but to state the most prosaic fact. This is the one book, which neither belongs to nor befits the infancy of the race, and yet it was found among men in the early days of the world's history; and with all the boasted learning and wisdom of the twentieth century, it still defies all competition. The philosopher and sage cannot equal it, neither shall it be exchanged for all the jewels and fine gold of the noblest poetry and richest products of the imagination. Human hands had indeed to do with it. Scores of different writers contributed to its pages; but this instead of accounting for it, rather deepens our perplexity as to its origin, unless there was manifestly, behind and above these human composers and compilers, some one true author who at least superintended and controlled the whole.

NOTE—The place of preeminence which the Bible occupies in literature is shown by the insistent demand for it and the magnitude of its circulation. The rate at which Bibles are now being printed by the American and British Bible Societies alone, represents an average of one every five seconds, twelve every minute, 720 an hour, 17,280 every day in the year. It is said that there are now at least 500,000,000 Bibles in the world. It has been translated into over 700 languages and dialects of the earth, and seven-tenths of the children of men can read it in their mother tongue.

b. Historical testimony.

The general acceptance of the Scriptures, both of the Old and New Testaments—according to the historical records—constitutes a strong presumption in favor of their claims to inspiration.

NOTE—In this connection the following testimonies are worth recording: Clement of Rome, who lived about A. D. 90, said, "The Scriptures are the true words of the Holy Ghost." Augustine also contended for the infallible accuracy of every word of Scripture.

Professor Gaussen says, "The Scriptures are given and guaranteed by God even in their very language."

Dr. Lee's Inspiration, page 14, says, "Matters of science and geographical details, mentioned in the Bible, are stated with infallible accuracy."

The Dean of Westminster, in an address delivered in Westminster Abbey on December 3rd, 1904, said, "If the Bible was inspired by a Divine Spirit, how could it record what did not actually take place? If an element of human misconception and mistake was to be recognized in the Bible, how could we regard it any longer as an inspired Book, or use it as an infallible guide of life?" And then, after speaking of some of the Bible difficulties, he said, "Behind and beneath the Bible, above and beyond the Bible, was the God of the Bible." Herein lies the true and only explanation of the mystery of inspiration.

Even the Roman Catholic Church—in spite of its inconsistent attitude towards the Bible—declared at the Vatican Council of 1870 that the Scriptures "contain a revelation without error. Having been written by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, they have God for their Author." Similar language was also used at the Council of Trent.

c. Its preservation.

The survival of the Bible through the ages is very difficult to explain if it is not in truth the Word of God. Books are like men—dying creatures. A very small percentage of books survive more than twenty years, a yet smaller percentage last a hundred years and only a very insignificant fraction represent those which have lived a thousand years. Amid the wreck and ruin of ancient literature the Holy Scriptures stand out like the last survivor of an otherwise extinct race, and the very fact of the Bible's continued existence is an indication that like its Author it is indestructible.

When we bear in mind the fact that the Bible has been the special object of never ending persecution the wonder of the Bible's survival is changed into a miracle. Not only has the Bible been the most intensely loved Book in all the world, but it has also been the most bitterly hated. Not only has the Bible received more veneration and adoration than any other book, but it has also been the object of more persecution and opposition. For two thousand years man's hatred of the Bible has been persistent, determined, relentless and murderous. Every possible effort has been made to undermine faith in the inspiration and authority of the Bible and innumerable enterprises have been undertaken with the determination to consign it to oblivion. Imperial edicts have been issued to the effect that every known copy of the Bible should be destroyed, and when this measure failed to exterminate and annihilate God's Word, then commands were given that every person found with a copy of the Scriptures in his possession should be put to death. The very fact that the Bible has been so singled out for such relentless persecution causes us to wonder at such a unique phenomenon.

d. Argument from the philosophy or nature of the case.

The proposition may be stated thus: The Bible is the history of redemption of the race, or from the side of the individual, a supernatural revelation of the will of God to man for their salvation. But it was given to certain men of one age to be conveyed in writing to other men in different ages. Now all men experience difficulty in giving faithful reflections of their thoughts to others because of sin, ignorance, defective memory and the inaccuracy always incident to the use of language. Therefore it may be easily deduced that if the revelation is to be communicated precisely as originally received, the same supernatural power is required in the one case as in the other.

e. Testimony from Archæology.

During the last half of the nineteenth century, archæological research in Bible lands has enabled us to bring forth much testimony for the credibility and authority of the Old Testament.

These archæological discoveries, the fruit of the pick-axe and the spade, include such things as inscriptions on rocks or temple walls, statues, obelisks, pavement slabs, clay tablets, papyrus rolls, coins, seals, pottery, and other objects, dug up out of the old buried cities of the past, and now preserved in the great museums of London, Paris, Constantinople, Berlin, New York, and other cities of the world. All the recent discoveries in Egypt and other Bible lands, which have any relation to Scripture, speak with one united voice, testifying to the accuracy of the statements of the Bible.

f. Its adaptability.

While the Bible had its beginning in the infancy of the human race and the latest contribution to it was made at least eighteen centuries ago, its message is as vital and applicable to human life and experience of the present as at any time in the past. It is the Book for young and old, rich and poor, lofty and lowly, wise and unwise—for all who need the Saviour and look for the life beyond, for all who need comfort and consolation, counsel and guidance along the way. There is no point in human experience where this Book does not touch us. Though Oriental in its origin, it fits the need of those of every nation, and kindred, and people, and tongue. Surely a book of such marvelous adaptability is beyond the possibility of mere human production and demands divine authorship to account for it.

g. Its transforming power.

The greatest sign of the quality of any book is the residuum it leaves behind, as it flows through the mind. As in streams where sulphur abounds, the green deposit is on the stones; and where iron abounds, the red hue is in the bed; and where gold is found, its lustre is on the very sand; so when a book flows through the mind, the supreme testimony to its quality is what it leaves behind. Is it vice or virtue; is it magnanimity, or pusillanimity; is it carnality or spirituality? The greatest proof, perhaps, that the Bible is the Book of God is that it leaves as residuum the gold of heaven, where it flows.

The Bible is like the banyan tree; its very branches bend down and take root. It spreads over whole continents, and could not be eradicated without tearing up the very soil of society.

The contents of the Scriptures have supplied themes for the greatest poets, artists and musicians which the world has yet produced, and have been the mightiest factor of all in shaping the moral progress of the race. Let us consider a few examples of the Bible's influence as displayed in the various realms of human enterprise.

Take away such sublime oratorios as "Elijah" and "The Messiah," and you have taken out of the realm of music something which can never be duplicated; destroy the countless hymns which have drawn their inspiration from the Scriptures and you have left us little else worth singing. Eliminate from the compositions of Tennyson, Wordsworth and Carlisle every reference to the moral and spiritual truths taught in God's Word and you have stripped them of their beauty and robbed them of their fragrance. Take down from off the walls of our best art galleries those pictures which portray scenes and incidents in the history of Israel and the life of our Lord and you have removed the richest gems from the crown of human genius. Remove from our statute-books every law which is founded upon the ethical conceptions of the Bible and you have annihilated the greatest factor in modern civilization. Rob our libraries of every book which is devoted to the work of elaborating and disseminating the precepts and concepts of Holy Writ and you have taken from us that which cannot be valued in dollars and cents.

The Bible has done more for the emancipation and civilization of the heathen than all the forces which the human arm can wield, put together. Some one has said, "Draw a line around the nations which have the Bible and you will then have divided between barbarism and civilization, between thrift and poverty, between selfishness and charity, between oppression and freedom, between life and the shadow of death." Even Darwin had to concede the miraculous element in the triumphs of the missionaries of the cross.

B. Internal proofs.

a. Biblical claims of inspiration.

The strongest witness to the inspiration of the Bible is the claim of the Bible itself. Nor can it be said that this is reasoning in a circle. If one thinks that to accept the claims of the Bible to its inspiration is like taking a man's own word that he speaks the truth, the reply is that we are not now referring to the truth of the Bible at all, but only to its inspiration. The truth or credibility of the Bible is assumed, being established by well grounded proofs. If the Bible then is proven to be true, if its statements of facts are credible, we are certainly justified in opening its pages to see what it says about itself.

The Bible plainly teaches that the words are inspired and that it is the Word of God. This teaching may be considered under three kinds of evidence.

First, Direct testimony. This is seen in the following passages: Ex. 4:10-12; 34:27; Num. 12:6, 8; Deut. 4:2; 18:20; Mark 12:36; II Sam. 23:2; Jer. 1:6-9; Num. 22:38; 23:26.

In the five books of Moses, in the books called historical, and books included under the general title of the Psalms, such expressions as the following occur hundreds of times: "Thus saith the Lord;" "The Lord said;" "The Lord spake;" "The Lord hath spoken;" "The saying of the Lord;" and "The word of the Lord." There is no other thought expressed concerning inspiration than that the writers spoke and wrote the very words that God gave them. Turning to the books called the prophetic, we find Isaiah saying, "Hear the word of the Lord;" and no fewer than twenty times does he explicitly say that his writings are the "words of the Lord." Almost one hundred times does Jeremiah say, "The word of the Lord came unto me," or declare that he was uttering the "words of the Lord," and the "word of the living God." Ezekiel says that his writings are the "words of God" quite sixty times. See as an example Ezek. 3:10, 11. See also Dan. 10:9; Hosea 1:1; Joel 1:1; Amos 3:1; Obadiah 1:1; Jonah 1:1; Micah 1:1; Nahum 1:12; Hab. 2:2; Zeph. 1:1; Haggai 1:1; Zech. 1:1; Malachi 1:1.

For the testimony of the New Testament Scriptures see the following: John 12:49, 50; 17:8; 5:19; Mark 13:11; Acts 2:1-4; 2:7, 11; I Cor. 2:13; I Thes. 2:13.

The Bible thus uniformly teaches the doctrine of verbal inspiration. It is the Word of God. This is the invariable testimony of the Book itself. It never, in a single instance, says that the thought of the writers were inspired, or, that these writers had a concept. The Scriptures are called "the Oracles of God," (Rom. 3:2); "the Word of God" (Luke 8:11); "the Word of the Lord" (Acts 13:48); "the Word of Life" (Phil. 2:16); "the Word of Christ" (Col. 3:16);

"the Word of Truth" (Eph. 1:13); "the Word of Faith" (Rom. 10:8). By these and similar statements do they declare, more than two thousand times, that the Bible is the Word of God—that the words are God-breathed or inspired.

Second. Inferential testimony.

By inferential testimony is meant that which is assumed by the Bible, and the natural implication belonging to many of its statements. The Bible assumes to be from God in that it meets man face to face with drawn sword and says: "Thou shalt!" and "Thou shalt not!" and demands immediate, unconditional and irreversible surrender to the authority of Heaven, and submission to all the laws and will of God, as made known in its pages. This of itself would not signify a great deal, though unique, were it not for the striking and significant results of such submission; but the natural inference of such assumption is, that the words of demand and command are from God.

Third: The resultant testimony.

There are certain results which follow believing the Word and submission to its requirements which cannot be accounted for on any other basis than that it is inspired of God.

First: It will impart spiritual life and save the soul: James 1:21; I Pet. 1:23; John 6:63; II Pet. 1:4; II Cor. 5:17.

The power and life of the Almighty lie hidden in the words of the sacred record; they are God-breathed; and that power and life will be manifested in the case of every one who receives them and submits to their requirements. None of the books which men have written can do this.

Second: It has cleansing power.

"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy Word" (Psa. 119:9). See also John 15:3; Eph. 5:26.

Third: By the Word we are kept from evil and the power of the evil one: Psa. 17:4; 119:11; John 17:14, 17.

b. Argument from unity.

The Bible is assumed to be a phenomenon, wholly unrivaled in the world of letters, even its enemies being judges, acknowledge this. One of its most important features is its unity, which is as marvelous as it is conspicuous. Every circumstance connected with its preparation and production, was calculated to prevent and prohibit such unity. Here are sixty-six different books, written by some forty different authors, in three different languages, and the periods of authorship cover a score or more of centuries. These human writers were brought up in different countries, and were so remote from each other in time and space that they could have had no mutual acquaintance, and could neither have conspired for an evil end nor combined for the best purpose. The subjects on which they wrote were very diverse and various, some historical, some prophetic, some devotional, some ethical. The form of their writings was in some cases prose and in others poetry, and yet, notwithstanding all these divergent elements, they have produced essentially one book. Not only is the Bible as a whole an unrivaled phenomenon, but its features are all phenomenal, and none more so than this convergence of contents like rays toward one common focal point.

(a) The unity is structural.

The Bible is built up on a definite plan. In the New Testament the four gospel narratives are not mere repetitions, but designed to present as many aspects of the life and career of the Lord Jesus Christ; then the book of Acts immediately follows, showing what He continued to do and teach by the Holy Spirit in the Church, and how the Pentecostal baptism prepared the Church for her witnessing career in Judea, Samaria, and then among Romans and Greeks. There are five Epistle writers: Paul, especially the Apostle of Faith; Peter, of Hope; John, of Love; James, of Good Works; and Jude, of Warning against Apostasy. Thus, without human design, or intentional cooperation, all the necessary ground is covered without overlapping.

(b) The unity is didactic and ethical.

There is no inconsistency in the moral teaching from beginning to end; or, if at first any is apparent, a further and more careful examination reveals harmony. The whole Bible consistently teaches, on the basis of natural religion, with creation as its cornerstone, an original and universal fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man; but that only on the basis of spiritual redemption. With the new creation as its cornerstone, is found again the true fatherhood or brotherhood which sin lost or forfeited. Around these dual conceptions of man's natural and spiritual relations to God and his fellow man, all ethical teaching of the Bible moves.

(c) The unity is historic.

The Bible, however, is not a history of the race, but rather of the Kingdom of God. It centers about a chosen family, the family of Abraham, and so a chosen nation—Israel.

(d) The unity is prophetic.

Here again Israel and the Kingdom of God form the central idea. Adam, the original creation king, lost his sceptre in the fall and Satan obtained it by right of conquest. The second man, espousing Adam's cause, overcame his victor, and so regained the lost sceptre; and in Him—the last Adam—the restored Kingdom will stand forever and the gates of Hell will not prevail against it. All prophecy ultimately relates to this new King, the divine head of the Adamic race, and to His Kingdom; to His first coming and its militant period, to His second coming and its triumphant period.

(e) The unity is organic.

It is the unity of a living organism, in which there is a pervasive, vitalizing spirit, making all parts living members and organs, all necessary to the whole body and to each other.

c. Argument from the credibility, integrity and trustworthiness of the Scriptures.

These belong to the province of Christian Evidences and will not be dealt with here, but nevertheless, as established by sufficient proof, constitute strong presumption in favor of inspiration.

d. The completeness of the Bible.

The completeness of the Bible demonstrates its divine perfection. The antiquity of the Scriptures argues against this, for the compilation of the Bible was completed more than eighteen centuries ago, while the greater part of the world was yet uncivilized. And since John added the capstone to the Temple of God's Truth there have been many wonderful discoveries and inventions, yet there have been no additions whatever to the moral and spiritual truths contained in it. Today we know no more about the origin of life, the nature of the soul, the problem of suffering, or the future destiny of man than did those who had the Bible eighteen hundred years ago. Through the centuries of the Christian era, man has succeeded in learning many of the secrets of nature and has harnessed her forces to his service, but in the actual revelation of supernatural truth nothing new has been discovered. Human writers cannot supplement the divine records, for they are complete, entire, "wanting nothing."

e. The character of its teaching.

The teaching of the Scriptures is infinitely superior to all the moral or ethical systems of men. God declares that "My thoughts are not your thoughts"—that is, God's conceptions of things are not man's conceptions. The method God uses to express this is to remind us how high the heavens are above the earth—even so high are His ways and thoughts above those of men.

The first impressive feature of the teaching of the Scriptures is the importance which is everywhere attached to holiness. Judging from what we know of systems of human origin, a religion from man would either have spent its force on ritual observance, or have allowed active service on its behalf to make amends for the neglect of other duties. Mohammedanism gives the highest place to those who fight and fall in conflict. Hinduism rewards most the observance of ritual worship. Jewish tradition taught that all Jews were certainly saved. The Scriptures, on the contrary, bring all men into the presence of a Being of infinite holiness, before Whom the most exalted human characters fall condemned; and they declare plainly, that nothing we can say or do in the cause of Christ can make up for the want of practical virtue. Those who have preached in the name of Christ are to be disowned if they be workers of iniquity, and the reception of the true faith makes Christian holiness only the more incumbent because it is only thus possible. Add to this the fact that Scripture seeks to regulate the thoughts and motives of men, and is content with nothing less than a state of heart which refers all our actions to God's will; and it must be felt that the morality of the gospel is not of man. Bad men could not have taught such truths, and good men would not have deceived the people.

But there is yet another peculiarity in the morality of Scripture, equally true in itself and striking. Sin is everywhere spoken of as an evil against God, and everywhere it is not the instrument or human agent who is exalted but God alone. The first notion is inconsistent with all heathen philosophy, and the second with the natural tendency of the human heart. In Scripture, on the contrary, sin is represented as an evil and bitter thing, because it is dishonoring to God. This distinctly appears in the Old Testament, and indeed forms one of its most marked peculiarities. See the following: Ex. 17:16, R. V.; Rom. 1:21, 28; I Sam. 2:29, 30; II Kings 19:22-37; Dan. 5:23; Heb. 3:19; Num. 20:12; II Sam. 12:9; Psa. 51:4.

The candor and sincerity of the inspired writers are not less remarkable than their moral precepts, and are quite incompatible with either fanaticism or imposture. They denounce the sins of the people: Deut. 9:24; Judges 2:19; I Sam. 12:12. The inspired historian records with all fulness the sins of the patriarchs: Gen. 12:11-13; 49:5-7; Ex. 32; Lev. 10; Num. 20:12; 27:12-14; Deut. 32:51. In the same spirit the Evangelists notice their own faults and the faults of the apostles: Matt. 26:31-56; John 10:6; 16:32; Matt. 8:10, 26; 15:16; 16:7-11; 18:3. With equal truthfulness the Scriptures record the humiliation of our Lord, His sufferings and dejection: Matt. 27:46; Heb. 5:7. The Apostle Paul records without reserve the disorders of the churches which he himself had planted and even adds that his own apostolic authority had been questioned among them: I Cor. 1:11; 5:1; II Cor. 2:4; 11:5-23; 12:20.

f. The scientific accuracy of the Scriptures.

The God of all truth cannot, in any of His utterances, contradict Himself. His kingdom cannot stand and be divided against itself. Manifestly, His works and His words must, in all essentials, agree. Hence the question as to the attitude of the Bible toward science cannot be avoided. There is a scientific element in the Word of God, though it is not in any proper sense a scientific treatise, and for obvious reasons should not be; since there is no need of any supernatural revelation of scientific facts, which may be ascertained in natural ways.

While this may be conceded, on the other hand the God of the Bible being also the God of nature, it is equally plain that, on whatever theme the omniscient One, who is the only infallible Scientist, speaks, even incidentally and casually, He must show Himself to be thoroughly familiar with His subject and consistent with His own moral character. The all-knowing God cannot be supposed to betray ignorance on any subject, nor the God of all truth to lend Himself to falsehood. The Bible claims divine authorship. Infinite veracity cannot lend sanction to what is essentially erroneous, nor can omniscience conceal itself behind the veil of popular illusion and delusion, prevailing superstition or careless inaccuracy.

We adduce the following statements in support of the above position:

- (a) Without anticipating, directly, scientific discovery, Biblical language, properly interpreted, does not contradict established facts.
- (b) A poetic phraseology is often used, which by the flexibility of figurative or imaginative terms, allows room for expansion and accommodation to facts when known. Hence the Bible is a scientific marvel. It belongs to the oldest class of literature, yet it is the youngest and newest in adaptation to scientific discovery, and perpetually keeps abreast of human progress.
- (c) Tested by cosmogony, astronomy, geology, and zoology, physiology and comparative anatomy, natural philosophy and sanitary science, etc., this Book evinces superhuman knowledge and wisdom.

NOTE—As to Cosmogony, the mother of all sciences, which is the science of creation, the Bible has this to say: "In the Beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Mr. Herbert Spencer devotes a chapter to the consideration of what he calls the most general forms into which the manifestations of the unknown are redvisible, and these forms he finds to be these five: space, time, matter, motion, force. Now, if the starting point of religion is really scientific, and these conclusions are correct, it must follow that these five forms which are the factors of all phenomena ought to make their appearance at an early stage in her scheme. We shall not, of course, expect to find them expressed in the terminology of science, but shall look for their theological equivalents. In the first two verses of Genesis we find these five forms suggested: "In the beginning,"—time; "God created the heavens,"—space; "And the earth,"—matter; "And the Spirit of Elohim,"—force; "Moved,"—motion. Geology, the science of the earth's structure and constitution, treating of the operation of its physical forces, and the past history of its developments, is one of the youngest of the sciences. A department of knowledge thus first really explored in the eighteenth century, would, therefore, be most unlikely to prove in accord with the opening chapter of the earliest book of the Bible, if that were a merely human production. The correspondence, however, is remarkable. Geology, so far as it may claim to have settled anything, outlines the story of creation somewhat thus: chaos, chemical light, expanse of atmosphere, appearance of land, vegetation in three forms, animal life, from the protozoa to the higher vertebrata, and, finally, man—exactly Moses' order in the first chapter of Genesis! First chaos; then God says, "Let light be," and light was; then an expanse of atmosphere, called in the English Bible, "the firmament," but in the Hebrew, "Rakya"—an expanse—a marvelously accurate word; then the continent, the dry land; vegetation in three forms; and then life—"the waters brought forth life;" then, bye and bye, higher animals, and at the end of the mammalia, man himself.

Comparative anatomy shows an order in the animal creation, from the lowest forms to the highest, rather than reversely, the question of rank among vertebrate animals being determined by the proportion of brain to the spinal column. In fish, it is 2 to 1; in reptiles, $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 1; in birds, 3 to 1; in mammals, 4 to 1; then in man, it takes a leap, and the proportion of brain to the spinal column is 33 to 1, which raises man far above any other animal. Common sense and observation might have shown Moses that man is far above mammals as a class, and the mammals higher than most fishes and birds, but no common sense or ordinary observation would have shown that the fish belongs below the reptile, or the reptile below the bird. Yet, thousands of years before comparative anatomy took rank among the sciences, Moses followed the correct order of classification in this story of creation. A candid and rational scientist looking at that first chapter of Genesis, must ask how any unaided human mind could have guided the hand that wrote those words.

Anthropology is the science of man's constitution. Was there any science in the days of Moses to teach him how man was constituted? Doubtless not, yet, in the second chapter of Genesis with the boldness of certainty, he writes, "God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." (Heb. "the breath of lives"), as though this phrase included both the animal life man has in common with the animal creation, and the spiritual life he received in common with God. According to the Word of God, man is a compound of spirit, soul, and body, and, as taught in the twelfth chapter of Ecclesiastes, when "the dust returns to the earth as it was," "the spirit returns unto God who gave it," death being the dissolution and separation of that which God brought into original unity. This is a plain reference to the original record in the second chapter of Genesis. The human body suggests little if any similarity in composition to the earth. Moses had no knowledge, as a human writer, that his body was one with the ground, but modern chemical analysis detects at least fourteen elements in the human body identical with the "dust,"—such as oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, silicon, magnesia, sodium, phosphorus, carbon. Yet nothing could be more unlike matter in its highly organized form in the human body than the "dust" of the ground from which that human body is divinely declared to have been formed. It was reserved for modern analytical chemistry to demonstrate that what Moses wrote is exactly true.

The above furnishes illustrations of the foregoing proof of the scientific accuracy of the Scriptures to which others may be added.

- g. Fulfilled prophecy.
- h. Attested miracles.

NOTE—Fulfilled prophecy and attested miracles have been dealt with under the heading of "The Certainty of Revelation," to which the student is referred.

STUDY QUESTIONS ON BIBLIOLOGY

1. Give a brief summary of the need and importance of examining the credentials of the Bible.
2. Give the designations of the Book, with origin and significance of each where given.
3. Give the seven-fold symbolism of the Book and quote one passage with each.
4. Give definition of Divine Revelation as it refers to the Bible.
5. Discuss the four-fold manner in which the reasonableness of a Divine Revelation is shown.
6. What is the two-fold proof by which God has certified the Bible as a Divine Revelation to man?
7. Give preliminary definition of a miracle, and discuss the several erroneous conceptions of a miracle which this definition corrects.
8. Give alternate definition of a miracle.
9. What conclusions are involved in the alternate definition of a miracle?
10. Discuss the five considerations which reveal the possibility of miracles.
11. Discuss the six considerations which deal with the probability of miracles.
12. Discuss the plausibility of miracles with the three-fold refutation of the theory that miracles are impossible because improbable according to human experience.
13. Give the evidential value of miracles.
14. Define prophecy in its limited meaning, as referring to prediction.
15. Give the distinction between the attestation of prophecy and that of miracles to divine revelation, and show the advantages which the former has over the latter.
16. Give the requirements in prophecy as an evidence of divine revelation.
17. Show how the feature of mysteriousness and obscurity is especially conspicuous in the prophecies concerning the Messiah.
18. Discuss the law of double reference, as applied to the fulfillment of prophecy.
19. Discuss the evidential value of fulfilled prophecy.
20. Quote Isaiah 41:21-23, and discuss negatively and positively the divine challenge contained therein.
21. Give the three-fold method by which divine truth is communicated to man, and define each.
22. Show the distinction between revelation, illumination and inspiration; and give Scriptural illustrations where these have acted cooperatively and separatively.
23. Give further considerations of the meaning of inspiration.
24. Discuss the Intuition Theory or Natural Inspiration and the objections raised against it.
25. Discuss the Illumination Theory or Universal Christian Inspiration, and the replies to it.

26. Discuss the Dictation Theory or Mechanical Inspiration and the remarks made concerning it.
27. What is meant by the Verbal, Plenary Theory or Full Inspiration?
28. Show the reasonableness of contending for the claim of inspiration for the original manuscripts only, and not for any translation or version.
29. Discuss the Scriptural view of inspiration.
30. Show why the Authorized rendering of II Tim. 3:16 is preferable to that of the Revised.
31. Give the teachings of the Scriptures concerning their own inspiration under the following heads: The Nature of the Inspiration of the Scriptures; The Extent of the Inspiration of the Scriptures.
32. Discuss the external proofs of the inspiration of the Scriptures under the following heads: Its Place in Literature; Historical Testimony; Its Preservation; Argument from the Philosophy or Nature of the Case; Testimony from Archaeology; Its Adaptability; Its Transforming Power.
